MCCXCVIII. MONT to KING HENRY VIII.¹

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime, modo omnes Protestantes Status hic Francfordie conventum agunt, in quo non tantum ij universi adsunt, qui Smalcaldico Federi nomina sua dederunt, verum omnes quicunque eam doctrinam profitentur, que in Augustana confessione continetur, ut Nurnberga, Ratisbona, Joachimi Electoris Brandenburgensis, Archiepiscopi Coloniensis, Episcopi Monasteriensis, Ducis Mauritij, Alberti Marchionis Brandenburgensis, Ducis Prussie, Oratores: qui firma et arcta confederatione sese convinciunt in ejus doctrine, quam Protestantium vocant, consensionem et professionem; et si a Romano Episcopo vel a Cesare vel a quoquam alio ejus doctrine nomine invadantur, armorum societatem et omnis fortune communionem paciscuntur, et invicem promittunt. Ultima die Decembris preteriti, in solenni actu sub testimonio septem clarorum virorum et notarij publici, omnes ejus doctrine Status considentes, socia arma et defensivam opem Archiepiscopo Coloniensi polliciti sunt, si a quoquam ob ejus doctrine susceptionem et professionem invadatur: similem quoque opem ei polliciti sunt Elector Palatinus et Elector Brandenburgensis. Quantum animadverto, hij Status firmam et securam pacem a Cesare desyderabunt et expetent; grave enim eis est amplius sub ea perplexitate et diffidentia degere, sed diserte nosse volent quid de Cesare sibi polliceri debeant; quem tempora commoda et oportunas occasiones expectare et captare suspicantur ad bellum in eos movendum: et ut horum Statuum animos admodum pacis cupidos video, sic quoque satis consentientes erectos et confirmatos, si necessitas pugnam exposcat, animadverto. Hec quoque Protestantium confederatio subinde novis accessionibus augetur. Quod si Cesar hanc causam armis cernere tentaverit, anceps et cruentum bellum futurum est; et utracunque pars tandem vicerit, in Germaniæ viscera et intestina ferrum stringetur, adeo ut tandem parata et exposita preda Turce futuri simus.

Ratisbone necdum quippiam per collocutores actum est: ij enim, qui a Catholicorum parte deputati erant, partim mutati sunt; et hoc Romani Episcopi arbitrio: loco enim Julij Pflug¹ Episcopi Cocleus suppositus est. Partim enim nondum advenerunt, adeoque hoc institutum ad principium frigidius quam tepidius est.

Milites per Superiorem Germaniam pro Gallo conducuntur. Vogelsbergius enim mandatum habere dicitur ad decem peditum signa conscribenda: et ante dies quatuordecim Gallicus quidam Orator, dictus Basfonteyn, per Metas profectus est, ubi cuidam inter prandendum ex magistratibus dixit, sibi Francfordiam ad hec Comitia indictum iter esse; verum necdum huc advenit.

Ea, que ex Roma et Venetijs huc scripta sunt, in Latinum versa, Majestati quoque Vestre transmittō²; Cui me sub debita fide et observantia suppliciter commendo. Datum Francfordie, septima Januarij, anno 1546.

MCCXCIX. SURREY and THE COUNCIL OF BOULOGNE to KING

IT maye like Your most Excellent Majeste, that having certayne espiall that Mons^r du Bies was set furthe of Monstruell with 600 horse and 3000 fotemen to releve the greate necessite of the fortresse mencioned in our former lettres², we toke yesterday bfore daye the trenches at St. Estiens with 600 fotemen, and sent oute M^r Ellerkar with all the horsemen of this towne, and M^r Pollarde with two hundred, that he brought the night bfore from Guysnes, to discover whither their campe marched, whiche we had discovered by their fyers at Novelier over night sixe myle on thyssyde Monstruell; and as they passed by Hardelow, M^r Pollard was hurte with a colveryn in the knee, and dyed therof the night folowing, of whom Your Majeste had a notable losse. Our horsemen discovered their marche beyand Hardelowe; wherupon I, thErle of Surrey, being advertised, according to the order agreed upon amongst us, ysshewed oute with M^r Bridges, Sir Henry Palmer, Sir Thomas Palmer, Sir Thomas Wyat, and two thousand fotemen, leving within Your Majestes peces two thousand fotemen; and the rest of the Counsaile here devided in the peces. And by that tyme that we had sett our horsemen and fotemen in order of battayle without the trenche of St. Estiens, thenmye was also in order of battayle on thissyde Hardelowe, and had put on their cariages by the seac syde towardses the fortresse; wherupon having discovered their horsemen not above 500, and fotemen abowte 4000, pondering the weight of the service, which might have imported no lesse successe then the wynnyng of the fortresse, and the courage and good will that semed in our men, the suertie of Your Majestes peces being provided for, upon a consultacion we presented them the fight with a squadre of pikes and billes abowte 60 in file, and two wynges of harquebusiers, and one of bowes, and our horsemen on the right wyng. Many of the capitaynes and gentelmen were in the furst rancke by their desirs, for bicause they were well armed in corselettes. The battayle of thAlmaynes came towardses us likewise with two winges of harquibusiers and two trowpes of horsemen. M^r Marshall, M^r Bellingham, M^r Porter, M^r Shelley, and M^r Granado, with all the horsemen of this towne and Guysnes, gave the chardge upon their right flancke, and brake their harquibusiers. Their horsemen fledd, and oures folowed the victorie, and killed and slew, till they came to the cariages, wher they brake 4 score and 10, accompted by tale this mornynge. Our squadre then joyned with th. Almaynes with a crye of as greate courage and in as good order as we could wisse; and by that tyme our furst rancke and the second were come to the pusshe of the pike, ther grewe a disorder in our men, and withoute cause fledd; at whiche tyme many of our gentelmen were slayne, which gave as hardye an unsett as hath ben sene, and could but have had good successe, if they had ben followed. So stynted they never, for any devise that we could use, till they came to the trenches; and being well setteled ther, which is suche a place as may be kepte against all theyr campe, they forsoke that, and toke the ryver, whiche gave themmye courage to folowe them, albeit, the night drawing then on, they folowed not far beyand. Assuring Your Majeste that the furye of their flight was such, that it boted litell the travaile that was taken upon everye stryete to staye them. And so, seing it not possible to stoppe them, we suffered them to retire to the towne. In this meane while our horsemen, thincking all won, fynding the disorder, were fayne to passe over at a passage a myle beneth Pont de Breke without any losse, havynge slayne a greate number of thenmyes, wherof we have yet no certayne advertisement. Thus was ther losse and victorie on bothe sydes. And this morning we sent over afore daye to nomber the deade. Ther was slayne of our side two hundred and fyve, wherof capitaynes Mr Edward Poynynges, Capitayne Storye, Capitayne Jones, Spencer, Robertes, Basforde, Wourth, Wynhecombe, Mr Vawse, and a man at armes called Harvy; Capitayne Crayforde, and Mr John Palmer, and Capitayne Shelley, and Capitayne Cobham myssed, but not fownd. All thies were slayne in the furst rancke. Other ther were that escaped, among whom Mr Wyat was one. Assuring Your Majeste that ther were never gentelmen served more hardelye, if it had chaunced, and saving the disorder of our fotemen, that fled without cause when all thing almost semed wonne. Thenmye toke more losse then we, but for the gentelmen, whose losse was moche to be lamented. And this day we have kepte the feld from the breke of daye, and thenmyes retired to Monstruell immediately after the fight, and lefte their cariages distressed behynd them, and not 20^{te} cartes entred into the fortresse, and that bysqyte. Beseching Your Majeste, thoughe the successe hath not ben suche as we wisshed, to accepte the good intent of us all; considering that it semed to us in a matier of suche importaunce a necessarye thing to present the fight: and that Mr Ellerkar may know we have humble recommended his good service unto Your Highnes, which was suche, as, if all the rest had aunswered to the same, same, thenmye had ben utterly discomfited; and that it maye please Your Majeste to geve hym credit for the declaracion therof more at lardge.

Further, wheras M^r Henry Dudley was one of those of the furst rancke that gave the unsett upon thenmyes, and as a man for his knowledge, hart, and of good service, it may like Your Highnes to be his good and gracious Lord, that, wheras M^r Poynynges, late Capitayne of Your Majestes Guardes here, is deceassed, if Your Highnes shall thincke hym able to succede hym in that rome, at our humble intercession to admit hym therto, if it may so stand with Your most gracious pleasure.

And thus, beseching Your Highnes to accept our pore service, albeit the successe in all thinges was not such as we wisshed, yet was thenmyes enterpryce disapoyncted, which could not have ben otherwise done, and mo of their parte slayne then of oures, and the fortresse in as greate miserie as bifore, and a suddayne flawte the let of a full victorye. And, if any disorder ther were, we assure Your Majeste ther was no defaulte in the rulers, nor lacke of courage to be geven them, but a humour that sometyme raigneth in Englysshe men. Most humble thancking Your Majeste that it hathe pleased the same to consider theyr payment, whiche shall moche revive their hartes to adventure most willingly their liefes according to their most bounden duetie in Your Majestes service, to make recompence for the disorder that now they have made. And thus we pray to God to preserve Your most Excellent Majeste. From Your Highnes towne of Bowloyne, this 8th of Januarye, 1545.

Your Majestes most humble and obedient servauntes and subjectes,

	JOHN BRYGGYS.	HENRY PALMER.	A. F.
			RYCHARD WYNDEBANK.

Post scripture. Wheras we thincke that this victuale can serve for no long tyme, that they have put into the fortresse, wherefore it is to be thought thenmye woll attempte the like agayne shortely; it may please Your Majeste to resolve, what is further to be don by us. And for the declaracion of our pore opinions therein, we have sent M^r Ellerkar to Your Majeste, to whom it may please Your Highnes to geve credite in that behaulfe. And the present tempest being suche, we have thought it mete to send thies bifore, and staye hym for a better passage.

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime; septima hujus mensis hinc unas ad Majestatem Vestram Regiam dedi literas, quas spero rite ad Majestatem Vestram perlatas esse. Ab eo tempore certis authoribus huc adscriptum est, Cardinales septem, et viginti duos Episcopos, Roma profectos, Tridentum accelerare mandato Romani Episcopi ad Concilium Tridentinum celebrandum, Romanus enim Episcopus in hoc Concilium tenendum Cesaris suggestu et instinctu incumbere dicitur, ut Protestantes hoc Concilium recusantes, deinde hujus Concilij Papistici decreto et autoritate damnatos, sub justa in speciem executione bello adoriri possit: hoc enim jam olim Cesarem meditatam esse. Papa thesauros ecclesiæ in hoc opus effundente, plurimi ratiocinantur tormenta illa bellica, quæ in Lantgravij teloneo supra Rhenum ante menses aliquot retenta sunt, quæ a mercatoribus Italis Vestræ Majestatis esse perhibita sunt, modo Romani Episcopi certis indicijs esse pervestigatum est; verum in quem usum missa sint, necdum certo intelligere potui. Satis constat Brunswicensis Ducis Oratorem Romæ egisse et anxie institisse pro pecunia in subsidium Domino suo mittenda, eique certam spem a Cardinale Fornesio pecuniæ propediem mittendæ factam esse, quæ pollicitationes eo capto (ut fieri solet) languere ceperunt. Elector Palatinus nuper in festo Trium Regum² eos articulos per universum Palatinatum publicari fecit, quos ad Majestatem Vestram descripsi, modoque in sua Universitate Heydelbergensi eum predicatorem habet, qui jam olim Reginae Concionator in Brabantia fuit. Oratores Colonienses, qui modo in hisce Comitijs agunt, heri a Palatino reversi sunt, quorum præcipuam profectionis causam ad Palatinum fuisse intelligo hanc: Protestantes, qui modo hic agunt, unanimi sententia et decreto statuerunt se honestam et decentem legationem ad Cesarem missuros, quæ orare et instare debeat ut Cesar his gravibus et periculosissimis dissidijs simultatibus et hostilibus concursationibus, que religionis causa per Imperium quotidie inundant, per Christianum, liberum, et pium Concilium in Germanica natione habendum mederi velit, prout jam olim sepius Imperij ordinibus pollicitus sit, quodque Romani Episcopi in Coloniensem Archiepiscopum indicta causa latis condemnationibus ac Cleri Coloniensis emendicatæ appellationi contra eundem editæ, nec accedere nec deferre velit; alioqui se hunc Archiepiscopum (qui jam plurimis annis honeste et omnium subditorum comprobatione et utilitate cum laude et gloria regnavit) ob religionem impetitum nequaquam diserere posse, rogareque eadem legatio debebit ut processus contra Coloniensem Episcopum institutos ad Imperij pares et reliquos Electores remittere et advocare velit, et hujus legationis subeundæ et personæ et tempus designata sunt, rogaruntque hij Status a Palatino, ut suos Protestantium Oratoribus in hoc causa coram Cesare agenda adjungere dignaretur, quem constanter respondisse ferunt, se omnia consilia et auxilia prompte in Archiepiscopi defensionem a quoquam ob religionem invasi collaturum; et tam se non recusare Oratores suos pro Episcopo una cum alijs ad Cesarem destinare velle, ut etiam sedulo apud Saxonem, Brandenburgensem, Maguntinum, et Trevirum anniti velit, ut hij Electores omnes simul honestam per se et preter illam communem Protestantium Statuum legationem ad Cesarem expediant; que pro Electoris Coloniensis jure et dignitate conservanda intercedere debeat, ut siquid controversum aut litigiosum contra Archiepiscopum Coloniensem a quoquam objiciatur, hoc reliquorum Electorum arbitrio et juditio terminetur, prout leges et receptæ in Imperio consuetudines volunt (quas Cesar quoque sacramento præstito Se observaturum sancte tactis sacrosanctis promisit): easque legationes circa Festum Mathie apud Cesarem futuras decretum est. Oratores ab Imperatore et Gallo ad Turcam missi decima Decembris preteriti Viennam reversi sunt, ut ex Augusta huc scriptum est. Litteras adjunctas Philippus Palatinus huc ad me misit, ut eas primo quoque tempore ad Majestatem Vestram Regiam transmitterem, cui me sub debita observantia et fide supplicem commendo. MASTER Secretary, after my right harty commendations. Here hath been kept the Feaste of thOrdre, with a gret ceremonye throughly in every bihaulf. First the place was honorably and magnifiquely garnished, that is to saye, the body of the church with a gret quantite of riche arres, as it shuld appere reserved to that use to serve at the Fest of the Toyson, for it is of that story, and very sumptuous. On both sydes of the quere of the church wer paynted very fynely al the armes of the Knightes and Companyons of thOrdre, that lyved at the last chapter, or wer made of the Company synnes, with a difference, to knowe who yet lyved, and who at this tyme is ded; for al yet lyving had ther armes paynted with ther crestes, and those departed ther armes oonly, with a worde wryten underneth "trepasse." The nombre of the Companyons be fyfty, and soo ther wer on eche side 25 places, which on both sydes, soo far as extended to the places of Kinges, was hanged from the armes down with cloth of tissue at the bak, and also cloth of tissue cast over the deske bifore, and that henge down to the grownde. The stalles under the rest of tharmes was, for the reredosse, crymsen tafta; to syt in, crymsen saten; and the deskes caste over with crymsen damaske, that dyd hang down to the grownde, which being ful, and as we saye cut owte of the hol cloth, made a very gorgeous shewe to the yee; which we had good tyme to behold, tarying soo long for thEmperour, as we did. There was put in ordre a nombre of Bisshoppes, with thir mytres and coopes to receyve thEmperour, with thassembre of al the clergie of the towne to receyve thEmperour also, which stode in the body of the church. There was also a solemne place prepared for thAmbassadours, and the place wel kept that noo man pressed bifore us, with a forme bifore us to leane at, covered with cloth of tissue and crymsen velvet. And after al thing thus in ordre, thEmperour with his Companyons cummyth to the church, which wer 8 besides Hymself, al appareled in crymsen velvet, both kyrtelles and roobes, with hoodes of the same, as the Knightes of the Garter have, which they here ware on thir hedes in stede of ther cappes, which becamme them notably wel, and had a good grace. There cam also, bifore al, the Officers of thOrdre, being foure, the Chauncelor, the Treasurer, the Register, and the Chief Herauld, whom they cal Toyson; all thiese foure wer appereled like the Companyons without difference, saving the Knightes outward roobes wer garnished with embroydery of gold, and ther oonly playn velvet; and Toyson had upon his robe a coler of thOrdre, with al tharmes of the Companyons in gold, graved, added unto the same, which made a brave shewe, and was the token to knowe him for Chief Herauld. Whenne they wer cumme, and thEmperour placed, ech other Companyon entred in to his place where his armes stode, having koshens of newe crymsen velvet layde there redy for them; and soo was the evensong of Saincte Andrewe song at length, and ended by 7 of the klok, and soo ended the ceremonye of that daye, which was Saturdaye.

Upon Sondaye, aboute 10 of the klok in the mornyng, thEmperour with his Companyons cam to the church, appareled as they wer in the even bifore, where was song the High Masse, with such ceremonyes as it was past oone of the klok or we departed; for whenne it cam to the tyme of offeryng, not oonly thEmperour Hymself offred, and the Companions, but also ther offred, by procteurs and deputies, al that wer absent, yet lyving, which was seriously doon, and with a good circumstance, wherein thEmperour did wel refreshe us with his facion and bihaviour in that presence, whenne Mons^r de Burez supplied the Kinges Majesties absence, who also in the execution therof set forth the matier very wel to us. For, when thEmperour had Himself offred, which He did with his officers cummyng bifore Him, his herauldes and

sergauntes, the rest of the Compaygnions kepyng styl ther stalles, and oonly putting of ther hoodes as He passed; whenne thEmperour was retourned, it semed ther was a gret loking and expectation who shuld offre first, the French King, or the Kinges Majestie; and therwith arryseth Mons^r de Bure, and after cursies made to the Sacrament and thenne to thEmperour, goeth the the Kinges Majesties stal, which was next to thEmperour, and soo nere, as it was within his cloth of astate; wherfore Mons^r de Bure sumwhat forbare to entre the very seate, and wold have stande a lytel a syde, thEmperour pulled hym by the roobe in to the very place, and caused him to put on his hode, which he dyd, and kept it on, whiles Toyson, after ther custume, had rehersed the Kinges Majesties style, and desired Him to cum to the offeryng. After which wordes spoken, Mons^r de Bure put of his hode for cursy, at his departure, and thEmperour likewise put of his hode holly, soo as He dyd after to noone other that executed for the other Kinges; which was noted. And when Mons^r de Bures came towardes thofferyng and from thofferyng, in his passage he signified in his cursies to us, howe this he did for the King our master; and when he was retourned to his own stal agayn, thenne after a lytel pawse he went to the French Kinges stal, and offred for hym, with a signification to the French Ambassadour in passing by hym; but this we marked, that whenne Mons^r de Bure departed from the French Kinges stal with cursy, as he did from the King our masters, thEmperour did oonly move his hode, as He did accustomably to any of them that made cursy to Hym; and this was noted, that to avoyde al argumentes that might be made of the higher place bytween the Kinges Majeste and the French King in this Ordre, bicause the French King beganne the ranke of the other side of thEmperour. ThEmperours badge with two pyllers in a fayre table occupied the first place of the other side the quere, and thenne the French Kinges place next that, soo as thEmperour kepyng both the first places on eyther side, the French King had the second place on the left syde, and the Kinges Highnes next on ther right side. After thoffering doone by al the Compaignons lyving and for them, the Chauncelour of thOrdre made a sermon, declaryng the institution of thOrdre and what was entendid therby, and what al ther apparel signified, wherin he spent an howre; and that doone they proceded in the Masse, and, that finishid, retourned to our lodging.

At foure of the klok we assembled again in the church, and founde thEmperours stal and al the stalles of the Kinges with desks before them, hanged and covered with blak velvet, and the rest hanged and covered with blak cloth, and the High Aulter likewise. And morover in the stal of the King of Scottes, departed, hanging from the armes a pece of cloth of gold of thre yardes long, and at the stal of every other Compaignon decessed, a peece of velvet of the same length, which made a representation as it wer of soo many herses. About fyve of the klok thEmperour cam with his Compaignons and officers, al appareled in blak cloth, with ther hoodes in stede of cappes, and the Ordre upon the outward garment; and soo continued there, whiles the Dirige was song at very gret length; and, that doone, departed.

Mondaye in the mornyng about 10 of the klok thEmperour, with his Compaignons and officers al in blak, repared to the church, to here the Dirige Masse, being prepared against that tyme fiftie candelles of virgin wax, eche candel having a skochen with the armes of eche oone of thOrdre, both alyve, and deed synnes the last chaptre. These candelles stode light, upon a beme before the High Aulter, tyl the tyme of thoffering, at which tyme the candel having thEmperours armes was taken downe by a Pursuyvant, having thEmperours cote armour on hym, and from hym delyvered to an Harrault, and by the Harralde delyvered to Toyson, who with rehersal of thEmperours style called thEmperour to the offeryng, and delyvered Him his candel, which thEmperour caryed to thoffering, and as He had offered it, it was kept light and put again in the place where it stode. And thenne was a candel taken down for the Kinges Majeste, with his armes at it, and Mons^r de Bure going to the Kinges Majestes stal was invited to thoffering, and the candel delyvered hym, which he offered with a good grace, as he did the daye bifore, and thEmperour had used him likewise. And soo the stalles wer perused, as they wer in ordre. And in every stal where the Compaignon is yet lyving, there was oone to supplie his place; but whenne the Heralde cam to the stal of him that was dede, there was noo man to supplie, but after the Chief Haralde Toyson had named him by his style, he turned him to thEmperour and with a lowde voyce said, "Il est morte," and thenne Toyson toke hymself the candel, having tharmes of him that is dede, and caryed it up to the Aulter very seriously, and offred it, not to the Bishop, but delyvered it to oone of the ministres appointed therfor, and from hym was taken to the Pursuyvant, who, with a ceremony, blewe it out; and I may saye a circumstaunce also, for there was experimented the conclusion, that want of measure destroyeth theffecte, for whenne he blewe to moch, the candel went not oute but lighted again. Whenne the candel was put oute, it was set again in his place with the other burnyng, and soo appered howe many places wer voyde. The behaviour in this matier was used with good ordre, without any fayling or trouble, eche man knewe his office and neded noo admonition. The lamentable wordes "Il est " morte," with the putting out of the candel, was a good representation of our estate, howe weake it is indede. Whenne thoffering was doone, the

Registre of the Ordre redde openly the statutes of thOrdre, with the names of al those that had been of thOrdre synnes the begynnyng; and therin he spent oone howre, soo as it was two of the klok or we went from the church that daye.

Mondaye at night al the blak was taken awaye, and the stalles again in ther fresh furniture as before, and at fyve of the klok thEmperour cam to church with his Companions and officers, al in white damaske, with ther garmentes gyrte, and ther hodes of crymsen velvet on ther hedes, which was a very good sight, and there was evensong song of our Lady, very freshely, to recompense the deul bifore; which ended not bifore 7 of the klok.

Tuesdaye in the mornyng thEmperour cam again to the church with his Compaignons, in white, and harde Masse of our Lady, very solemnely doone, at which tyme thEmperour oonly did offre, and at that offryng al the Compaignons did cum out of ther stalles, and wayted on the Emperour to the offering, and brought Hym again to his stal, which they did not bifore. I note unto youe the more diligently the offeringes, bicause in them we receyved many curseys of them that offered, aswel thEmperour as other, both in going to the offering and the commyng from it. Synnes thiese ceremonies abode thEmperour hath spent moch tyme in the Chaptre with his Compaignons, who sate in counsayl on ther matiers oone daye from two at after noone tyl eleven at night, and the next daye from oone to seven at night; and yet we here not abode what is therin doone; but Mons^r de Bures hath been with me, and told me he wyl advertise the Kinges Majeste what is doon there.

And nowe I thinke, or ye have red thus far, ye wyl mervel what I had adoo to wryte this, even asmoch as I have sumtyme when I wryte John Kingston, wherwith I have spent in an afternone asmoch paper as this. And herby ye maye perceyve I am not yet waxed slowtheful in wryting, althought of late postes have goon slowly from us. If ye knowe any, that lovith noo ceremonyes, geve hym this letter to rede for special newes. And soo fare ye hartely wel. At Utrek, the 11th of January.

Your assured loving frend,

STE. WINTON.

Secretaries.

MCCCIII. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to GARDYNER, &c.¹

AFTER our most hartie commendations unto Your good Lordships. The Kinges Majeste hath seen your letters of the second of Januarij, by the which His Majeste doth not only understand, after what sorte you be finally resolved with thEmperours Counsell in the matier of thesclarissment, but what further conference also hath byn betwene you and them in the matiers of the mariage and of the merchauntes, all which His Majeste taketh in very good and gracious parte towards yow. And as for the mater of the mariage, His Highnes pleasure is, that at your next meting with thEmperours Counsell, taking somme good occasion to entre talke of that matier, you, my Lord of Winchester, shall say, that considering the smalnes of the summe of money, which was offred by them in their last conference with you of that mater, you durst not, for the good affection you bere towards thadvancement of this mariage, write directly to His Majeste therof, but did advertise certen of your frendes of His Highnes Privie Counsell of the dote offred by them, from whom you have receyved aunswer, that they also, knowing how well His Majeste was affected at the begynning towards the concluding of this mariage, durst not in any case open this overture unto His Highnes; fearing, lest, upon the disclosing therof, His Majeste woold either have conceyved that this mater had not byn even so earnestly ment of thEmperours parte from the begynning, as it was by you advertised hither, or that thEmperour beareth not so good affection to His Majeste and this realme as He doth to Fraunce, seing that with one other of the same daughters He was contented to have departed so liberally that way, and now, notwithstanding ther is a great difference in the personages of my Lord Prince and the Duke of Orliaunce, yet with this, whom He promised tadvance as his own doughter, doth make so meager an offer as was by them proponed. And having said this moche, His Majestes pleasure is, that, sucking out asmoche as ye may to what other condicions they will descende, you shall by the way touche (as it wer to feele them), and say (as of yourself) that yf they woold be contented to departe with somme pece of land upon their frontiers adjoyning to His Majestes possessions, as Graveling, Burborough, Saint Omers, or suche other, you would yet have good hope of a good successe of this mariage, wherof bycause you have byn a minister, you may say you would be most glad to se a good ende. And now, the mater of thesclarissment of the treatie being ended, which was the cause of your comming thither, you have in commaundement to make your repayre home, where His Majeste myndeth otherwise to employ you; and for the finishing of this mater of the mariage, yf it shall lyke thEmperour either to send Mons^r Skipperus, or any such other as shall lyk Hym, well instructed hither, or will send good instruction to his Ambassadour resident here, with somme suche honorable conditions as may in reason be worthy the hering, you doubt not but His Majeste will bothe give therunto a frendly audience, and suche aunswer also, as they shall have good cause to be therwith well contented. And here His Majeste would you shuld touche agayn unto them the smalnes of their offer, and declare the towardnes of my Lord Prince; who, besides the place wherunto he is called of God, is for personage, beautie, wit, and all other thinges, as towardly (thankes be to God), as any child in Christendom of his yeres.

And, after you shall have declared the premises, and set furth the same in suche sorte as occasion shall serve you, and have also made a full ende of that mater of thesclarissment, the full conclusion wherof His Majeste requireth you to hast, asmoche as you may, and in no wise to breake of before the full perfiting therof, His Majeste wolde thatt in the mean tyme yow shuld break, as of yourself, declaring the greatt zeal yow beare to the contynuance of thamite betwen Ther Majestes and thadvauncement of thEmperours affayres, in what misery, scarcenes, and penury of all thinges the French Kinges domynions standeth at this present, how all the frontiers towardes his dominions be divasted and utterly ruined; yow think therfor thEmperour can never, ne shall at any tyme, have thadvauntage that He may presently have, yf He will entre the warres agayn, which for non observaunce and breking of the treatye on the French partye, He may have good occasion to doo, if it shall lyke Hym to take the same. He hath had to many tymes heretofore experience, how the French King observeth his pactes, and what trust may be given unto Him. He hath hard, how He hath gon about now of late to enterteyn thAlmayns, and what practises and devises He useth every way both for the stealing of Cambray and other his townes. Yf He mynd to have an establisshed peax, now is the tyme to worke it, whiles His Majeste is also in the warres with Him. Yf the peax wer ones concluded that way, it shall be more difficill, wheras now He may with no great mater easely bring the French King to suche condicions as Himself shall desire.

Finally,

Finally, His Majeste woold you shuld also assay, whither ye may attayn at thEmperours hand, that He will be contented that His Majeste, for his money, may have somme noble men, with somme convenient number of souldiours, for the doing of any sodeyn exploiet upon his ennemies. You may declare that, yf thEmperour can be contented therewith, it shall not only give the world to understand that this amitie and peax, which is now nuely esclarissed and confirmed, is strayt, perfect, and most earnest in dede, but it shall also satisfie very moche the doubtfull myndes of a great many, who upon occasion of thinges passed be not perchaunce in all thinges well satisfied.

And thus having don what you may for the setting forward of this mater, His Majestes pleasure is, that you, my Lord of Winchester, taking your leave of thEmperour, make your repayre to his presence, resorting nevertheless also to the Regent before your comming away, to Whom His Majeste requireth you to make his most hartie commendations, and to pray bothe Her, Score, and the rest of thEmperours Counsell not to give over hasty credite to the clamours of somme in those merchauntes maters, who for the more part will be aunswered with no reason; assuring them that His Majeste bothe myndeth and hath commaunded all thEmperours subjectes to be enterteyned here in all thinges frendly, and used according to the treaties and old amitie betwene Him and thEmperour, and that in any there reasonable sutes they shall have no lesse expedition of justice, then His Majeste woold wisshe to any of his own subjectes; trusting that His Highnes merchauntes and other subjectes, aswell in Spayn as elswer, shall be used in all thinges of their side accordingly.

And because we doubt not but the French men, who having no ground ne foundation therof, do neverthesse many tymes spred and divulge vayn and untrue bruites, either have alredey or shortely will, upon occasion of suche thinges as have lately chaunced at Bulloign, make moche greater bragges then they have cause or may be trueyly justified; and to thintent your Lordships may have wherwith to aunswer as any occasion shalbe ministred there for the same; the Kinges Majeste hath willed us to signifie unto you the very trouth, so farfurth as His Majeste is yet advertised, of suche thinges as have lately chaunced at Bulloign, to be by you further declared, as you by your discretion shall thinke convenient. My Lord of Surrey, having now of late had often tymes very good successe against thennemies, and having burnt both the town and the ships at Estaples, and sens that tyme distressed their victuailles oftentimes comming towards their new forte, had brought them in suche miserie, as partely for want of victuailles, partely for want of wood, houses, and other necessaries, ther have died above 400 persons within the same forte, within the space of 15 or 16 dayes ; and finally wer reduced to suche extreme miserie, as without a present remedie they must of necessitie have byn compelled to abandon the fortresse ; for the relief wherof being a great revictualment provided for, my Lord of Surrey having also woord of the same, with the number of 2400 fotemen or therabouts taken out of the peces under his rule, and thorsemen, aswell of Guysnes which he caused to be specially sent for, as of Bulloign, upon Thursday the 7th of this present in thafternone went from Bulloign towards Hardelew, for the let of the said revictualment ; and the same day towards the evening met with thennemies, being of fotemen 6000, besides their horsemen, which in number wer also moche more then wer on our parte ; at which meting wer slayn on our side about the number of 9 score, and of thennemies above thre hundred, besides that our men distressed almost all their victualles, in so moche that of 60 and odd wagons, loden with victualles, the hole number was by us distroyed and brought away, saving 10 wagon lodes ; and had not the courage of somme of our men ben overmoche, and to say the trouth more then wisdom woold, they had had the fayrest day that had byn had apon thennemies syns the begynning of theis warres, but the rasshnes of a few put the greater number in to a disorder, wherof ensued the breach of their array, and consequently the losse of 7 or 8 yong gentilmen, the losse of whom, for that they wer towardses, His Majeste more esteemed a great deale then the rest ; amonges whom Sir George Pollard was one, stricken on the kne with a gonne out of Hardelew Castle, wherof he died within two houres after ; Edward Poninges, and certain others meaner personages : and this was thende of the mater, as the Kinges Majeste is advertised by somme that wer present at this skirmuche, which we doubt not but the Frenchmen will reaporte no lesse then the wyning of a great battayll, because in this misordre it chaunced them to have one or two of the captayns enseignes. Their bragges be, we doubt not, to well knowen in those parties to have over hastie credite, and shall, after the declaration of the trouth by you, be moche lesse beleved. Thus have we writen the hole of that chaunce unto you, which although it be suche as neither partie was therby a gaygner, yet had our men thende of their journey, for their victuailles wer distressed, and have also seen suche experience of the fruct of rasshnes, as we trust shalbe a good lesson for them not to lose hereafter the lyke advauntage after that sorte.

Your Lordship shall also understand that, where the Kinges Majeste in respect of the skarcenes of grayn and victuailles within this realme, and for the better furniture of His Majestes peces of Bulloyn, Calys, Guysnes, &c.

hath now presently dispeched from hens William Watson and John Dymmock into those parties, and given them in commaundment, after they shall have conferred with Stephen Vaughan touching the charge committed unto them, to provide partely in Holland and other thEmperours countrees, and partely at Hamborough, Breame, and other partes ther aboutes, a certen quantitie of grayn and other victuailles for His Majestes use¹; His Highnes pleasure is, that your Lordship shall also make thEmperour and the Regent privey herof, and travell so bothe with Them and suche of thEmperours Counsell as you shall thinke mete, as His Highnes said Agentes may have bothe libertie to provide, and fre passage with, the said grayn and victuailles accordingly.

Postscript. The Kinges Majestes pleasure is, that, amonges your talkes of the merchautes maters, ye shall declare unto thEmperours Counsell the great and continuell deceiptes, which is used amonges his subjectes in the coloring of Frenchmens goodes, which fraude having byn of long tyme used by them, is now so moche encreased, as no ship passeth from Fraunce, but it is named to have the goodes of thEmperours subjectes: yf by proclamation or other order somme meane wer taken by thEmperour for the helpe therof, it shuld not only be an occasion of moche quietnes, and stay many contentions, which dayly aryse for the same, but be occasion also, that their merchautes might passe with their goodes more certainly and surely.

Syns the writing of this letter it hath also byn thought good, that ye do differre to speke for the licence for grayn and victuailles for a tyme, lest perchaunce (yf thEmperour shall not be willing to graunte the same) He may excuse Himself for the skarcenes, which excuse, yf the Kinges Agentes shall have bargayned before, may the more easely be aunswered.

Syns the writing of this moche, arrived here Sir Raff Ellerker from Bulloyn, by whom the Kinges Majeste is advertised for trouth that of the Frenchmen ther be slayn above 500, and of ours 200, and that of 92 wagons loden with victuailles, not passing 6 wer brought to ther fortres, the residue all distressed by our horsemen, their wagonners and wagon horses slayn, and Mons^r de Bees with all the French horsemen dryven to ronne away a good pase, our men having them in chase 3 myles beyond Hardelow.

SERENISSIME REX, ac Domine clementissime. Decima hujus mensis unas ad Majestatem Vestram hinc dedi literas, quas commode modo perlatas esse spero. Medio tempore expertus sum crebras his Statibus esse cum Electore Palatino tractationes; ante quadriduum enim ad eum hinc profecti sunt Orator Saxonicus, Orator Wirtenbergensis, et Orator Argentinensis, qui delecti a reliquis Statibus omnium nomine se ad Palatinum contulerunt: a quorum reditu rumor hic increbrescere cepit ipsum Palatinum huc propediem adveniturum; constat eum in primis dogmatibus cum Protestantibus consentire, prout nuper ab eo publicati articuli arguunt. Capitaneus ille Gallicus, dictus Georgius a Reckroed, qui jampridem mensibus aliquot hæsit apud Lantgravium, sub quo et natus est, ante biduum huc advenit Comitatu duodecim equitum, ac hospitio hic fruitur ex publici metatoris assignatione: multi putant eundem habere, que Gallie Regis mandato his Statibus significet, nuper enim Gallicus quidam nobilis ad eum a Rege missus advenit, verum nondum apud Status se insinuavit. Constat multos pedites ex hisce Germanie partibus in Galliam clam se recipere, quos a dicto Reckroed conductos esse multi suspicantur. Gallorum Rex modo suos quæstores apud Helvetios habet, qui solitam eis pensionem exolvunt, quod argumento esse videtur Gallum eorum opera uti subinde velle. Ex Italia passim litteræ scribuntur, indicantes Romanum Episcopum magnum conscribere exercitum, et famam esse Eum has copias contra Germanos emissurum, fidemque paratiorem huic relationi faciunt tormenta illa bellica nuper hic deprehensa, quæ constanter asseruntur Romani Episcopi esse. Cæsaris quoque in Protestantium religionem offensus animus multis suspectus est, et verentur ne a Romano Episcopo incitatus durius quippiam contra hos Status moliturus sit. Africanam enim profectionem in hoc comminisci suspitio est, ut hos Status imparatos et oscitantes opprimat; nam constat Cesarem ingentem pecunie vim ex Hispania, Neapoli, et Sicilia huc in Germaniam per mercatores trajicere, que parum videntur Algeriæ expeditioni convenire. To the Kinges Majestie.

MCCCV. GARDYNER, &c. to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASITH it Your most Excellent Majestie to understand, that after the depech of our last letters to Your Highnes of the seconde of this moneth, signifying our agrement here upon such capitulations as Your Majestie had signified unto us to be agreable to your gracious pleasour and contentation, we wer desired not to trouble them further therin, tyl the ceremonyes of the fest of thOrdre wer passed, which began the Saturday at night, and continued tyl the Tuesday at none, which was Twelfth even. And, notwithstanding the solemnite of that fest, we sent to Grandvela to desire him that we might finishe that we had among us agreed to be doone; wherupon Mons^r Skepperus repared to me, the Bishop of Winchester, upon Twelf Daye at night, shewing howe Mons^r de Prate, who by thEmperours commaundement must be present at this matier, could not stere out of his house, being taken with the gowte, but trusted that upon Saturday he shuld be able to com abroad; wherfor in the meane tyme desired us to be content to commen with Chaunceler Nigri and Mons^r¹ Skepperus, for sum ordre to be divided for satisfaction of thEmperours subgettes, which I, the Bishop of Winchestre, extremely refused, saying I wold not speke any thing in that matier, tyl we had passed the other; adding, howe I liked not the request after a delaye desired upon an apparaunte consideration, and that it might have an evel construction. Wherupon Mons^r Skepperus signifying the same to the said Grandvela, brought worde again from hym that he liked wel my consideration not to speke of the matier of the merchauntes, tyl the other wer passed, as he toke it alredy for doone; and soo the 8th daye of this moneth we loked certaynly to mete with them the next daye, which was Saturday was sevenight.

The 9th daye it was noysed abroad, and of many affermed for truth, that thEmperour was mervelously taken with the goulte, which was also signified to us for an excuse of our not meting, with allegation that Grandvela coulede not speke with thEmperour, and request that we wold not thinke long, and promyse that the next daye we shuld mete, and that the houre and tyme shuld be signified in the mornyng the next daye.

The 10th daye, whenne we harde nothing from them by noone, we went ourselfes to Grandvela, as men not a lytel troubled with this delaye, suspecting always the worst, and desirous to doo our dutie to Your Majestie, if we founde juste cause of suspition, to signifie the same to Your Highnes with spede. Whenne we engreved the matier to Grandvela, fyrst he swore they toke the matier for doone and absolute, and that thEmperour was content with it. Secondly, he assured us there was noo delaye but of necessite of thEmperours sykenesse, Who had desired hym not to medle with Hym in any matiers for a daye or two, and therwith Grandvela desired us not to suspecte that they delayed for any sinistre purpose with Fraunce, for there was noo such matier; and therupon talked with us in the dispraysse of French men, and howe the French King hath goone aboute to get money in Parys, and fyndeth smal comforte, for there is, he said, moch povertie in Fraunce both in men, money, and victualles; adding, howe he understode the French men in the newe fortresse besydes Bolen be in gret distresse for victualles, and howe the French King makith preparation for the revictualment. And soo, with such communication enterteinyng us a while, he finally promysed that we shuld mete the nexte daye, if it wer possible, and that of the tyme he wold send us worde: and soo departed from hym, with trust to have occasion shortly to send Your Highnes the thing loked for; the having wherof shuld releave the expectation susteyned for the same.

The 11th daye, towardses night, Mons^r Grandvela desired us to cum to hym, with signification that Mons^r de Prate, President Skore, Mons^r Skepperus, and Chaunceler Nigri, was there. At our repare thither it was proponed by Grandvela that, having had communication of diverse matiers, and an agrement condescended upon sum of them, it wer expedient we agreed also in the rest; wherupon President Skore beganne to entre declaration of the griefes of certain Duchemen, compelled by Your Highnes ministres to carye victualles to Boleyn, and in the waye taken by the Frenchmen and spoyled and put in to the galye, and lost al they have; and then brought in other greves, and accumulate al that matier to gither. Wherunto for answer we wer rounde, that in thiese matiers we had noo commission. An other matier

there is, which they called doone, and we had signified it to Your Highnes as doone: if they wold nowe doo it, in dede we wer redy, and if they wold not, to speke playnly to us. Wherupon our communication waxed earnest, and we talked of sum particuler causes of the merchautes, and sayd our mynde playnly in them; and finally, to dryve them to an issue, tolde them we must nedes wryte to Your Highnes the circumstaunce of al matiers, and howe they be used, howe often we have refused to joyne this matier of the merchautes with the publique causes, and howe sumtyme they served for a staye, and sumtyme wer passed over, as Mons^r de Grandvela had sent worde to me, the Bishop of Winchestre, that I did wel not to speke of them bifore al wer past, as they did, and said we must wryte. Mons^r de Grandvela, instede of answering to the message he sent me, the Bishop of Winchestre, spake softly to me, as I, sytting at the bordes ende, was next hym, that I shuld not myslyke the article, that he wold make and send me the next daye. I told hym I myslyked al delayes, and in this matier had noo commission; and soo departed from them that night in a malencoly facion. Grandvela accompanied us to the doore, unto whom I, the Bishop of Winchestre, made request that we might speke with thEmperour: he said he wold procure it, as soone as he might. Al that night we remayned in a marvelous perplexite, and yet to wryte therin sodenly to Your Highnes, oonles we might perceyve it had some foundation on ther behaulf, we thought not expedient. We remembred also that in cace of extremite we have commission to conclude a general clause for relief of the merchautes, rather thenne to staye the hol therupon, and thought necessary to see what they wold doo the next daye.

The 12th daye Mons^r Skepperus brought from Grandvela articles by them conceyved, concernyng ther merchautes and ther subgettes, with commission to swere on Grandvelas behaulf, as he did execute it with the circumstaunce that there was never ment any delaye on ther behaulf for noo respecte, and that they have ment from the begynnyng optima fide, and howe the marchautes have caused the Lordes of this Courte soo to sue to the Emperour and the Counsayl on ther behaulf, that they must nedes doo sumwhat, and howe Grandvela was enforced to speke thusmoch in it, and desired us to make a face to doo sumwhat in thiese matiers, and al shuld be shortly sped. Wherupon we, to avoyde al encombre, have been content to doo soomoch, as byndeth nothing Your Majestie; wherwith although we have commission, we wold not gladly medle, oonles Your Majestie had seen a minute of the convenaunt bifore; but thusmoch we have been content to take upon us, to be humble suters to Your Majestie in the matiers, with a good trust Your Majestie wyl take the same in gracious parte, which we most humbly desire Your Highnes to doo; and, for avoyding our blame, to have in your gracious remembraunce that we have commission to deduce the matier of ther articles into a general convenaunt; and, for avoyding therof and the better expedition here, have graunted to be suters to Your Majestie according to ther request. And upon this agrement we beganne to agree to begynne to wryte, the cure and charge wherof was committed to Mons^r Skepperus, who was metely wel travayled to goo up and downe bytween them and us, to agree upon a perfite minute, wherby both shuld wryte, and herin we spent the 13th and 14th daye.

The 15th daye Mons^r Skepperus desired a cople of our commission, which was delyvered him; upon the sight wherof beganne a newe disputation of the sufficiencie of it for this purpose, bicause it makith mention of a meting bytween Your Majestie and thEmperour, which hath not taken place. This was a newe scrupule, wherof we wer moche afrayde; for, if they had ment to fynde apparaunte matier of delaye, it wold have served them better thenne any other. We sawe thenne a commission for them, which we liked not neyther, for it had in the preface a memorie of the merchauntes matiers. In this matier Mons^r Skepperus was referendary betwen us and them, and wery of us both, and by them it was thenne proponed that we shuld conclude and passe thiese articles, with promyse of ratification by Your Highnes and thEmperour, ech to other, within oone moneth, wherunto we thought good to agree, being the same as good for Your Highnes purpose as otherwise, being the grounde of the bonde established in the treatie, wherof this is the declaration, wherunto whenne the ratification shalbe added, which hath a shorte terme, there cannot be a more perfite conclusion.

The 16 daye in the mornynge, by mediation of Skepperus, we agreed on the forme of the wordes, and beganne to wryte again, and perfited it, with determynation to have sent it awaye upon Sondaye in the mornynge, but we coulde not get Mons^r de Prates seale to it.

The 17th daye Mons^r de Prate was with the Emperour in matiers of the Chapter for thOrdre, and noo man wyl passe nothing, but He seeth it, and considereth it Himself at lenght; and soo that daye passed.

The 18th daye we be cum to an ende, and the depech of this post, by whom we sende ther parte with ther subscriptions and seales, with a cople of our parte delyvered unto them, which we have promysed shalbe within a moneth ratified by Your Majestie, as thEmperour is bounde to doo the semblable. And considering we wer drawn from daye to daye with hope of expedition, according to Your Majesties expectation, we trust Your Majestie

Majestie wyl take our delaye of wryting in gracious parte after your benigne and accustomed goodnes. We have not forgotten the matier of thayde, but we durst medle with nothing wherwith to interrupt this.

In this Courte be nowe noo newes, but al thing in a silence from al parties. Your Majesties matiers with thEmperour occupieth nowe al the communication, and they be in maner knownen abroad.

Of the French King nothing is abroad, ne otherwise we canne understande any thing. The French Ambassadour hath been serched, and he knowith nothing. There goo to Cambraye, on thEmperours bihaulf, the Chaunceler Nigri, and the President of Arase, to mete with certayn from the French King, oonly for decision of private contencions, as it is affermed unto us, where we might geve credite.

There was a speking of Mons^r Grandvelas going in to Almayn, but it is not soo; and when thEmperour wyl goo hens, being nowe recovered and wel, it is uncertain, and by reason of the wether almost as uncertain, whenne He maye goo hens, if He wer determyned.

The Bishop of Rome hath opened his Counsayl at Trent, which He callith generally. They that tel it us saye He is moved therunto, bicause He trustith it shal not take the due effecte. The Bishop of Rome Hymself travayleth howe to exalte his familie, and therin workith mervelouslye, and specially with thEmperour.

ThEmperour hath not yet made an ende of the Chaptre with his Compaignons of thOrdre.

Here is noone other matier at this tyme worthy the wryting to Your Majestie; but, as we shal have knowledge further, we shal according to our dueties advertise Your Majestie with diligence, and praye Almighty God for the preservation of your most noble and royal astate. At Utrek, the 18 of January.¹

To the Kinges Majestie.

MCCCVII. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to GARDYNER, &c.¹

AFTER our right hartly commendations unto Your good Lordships. Thies may be to signifye unto the same, that the Kinges Majeste hath received your letters with the new capitulations in forme, signed and sealed by thEmpereurs Commissioners, and taketh your doinges therein right well and very thankfully, having commaunded us for aunswer to the particulers of your sayd letters to addres His Highnes pleasour unto youe as foloweth. Furst, whereas upon sum doubt of the validite of your commission, you, for the more perfection and establishment of the [same, treated] with the sayd Commissioners, and they with you, for the ratification of the same to be made and declared by the Kinges Majeste and thEmpereur alternatively within one moneth after the date of your sayde convenaunt, His Majeste hath to that effect passed the sayd ratification for his part, which He sendyth unto you by this bearer, to be delivred to thEmpereur when you shall knowe that He hath also sent furthe his ratification unto his Ambassadour here, to be delivred unto His Majeste, oreles shalbe pleased to delivre the same unto you there, which His Highnes supposeth He will have caused to be putt in order at the furthest by that tyme these shalbe arryved with youe, bicaus the tyme will draw very fast

on for thaccomplishment of his part in that behalf. Secondly, whereas thEmpereurs Commissioners, contrary to Mons^r Granveles promise, as you write, have proponed two articles touching the maters of the marchauntes, which be thought expedient to be put [in ure] for the commodite of the subjectes of both Princes, and you have promised tavaunce the same to His Majeste, to thintent they may take effect here upon condicion the like be don there for His Majestes marchauntes; His Majeste is pleased you shall signifye unto the sayde Commissioners, or to thEmpereur Himself, as occasion shall serve, that, albeit the self same thinges which they propownde now in their two articles, both touching the custumes and thimpositions and other griefes and injuries pretended to be don to the ministres and subgetes on eyther syde, wer so declared for our purgation at the dyet, as nothing could justly be replyed to the contrary, yet for their further satisfaction His Majeste is pleased that the Ambassadors of eyther Prince, with such other of eyther of their Counsailes, as They shall think meet to sende or appoynt for these purposes, shall peruse and see within the tyme prefixed the custumers bookes, both here and there, and take out autenticq cotypes of the same; and that if there be any exactions used by thofficers, or unlauffull impositions set by the Princes, the same shalbe reformed respectively where ther is faulte founde. And likewise such the griefes and complainctes of eyther the Princes subjectes for other mater, as have not ben alredy determined, shalbe herd and determined according to tharticle. And, now that His Majeste hath shewed Himself so conformable in all other thinges to their desyres, He doubteth not but that they will condescende also to the perfection of that, which His Highnes hath just cause to desyre of them, and for the obteyning wherof you had speciall commission of His Majeste: and that is, one, thobligation of the tounes or States for the due observaunce of the treatye, which if you handle well with Skepperus and the rest of the Counsayl there, His Majeste doubteth not but they may facily enduce thEmpereur to agree to the same, consydering the gret benefite therof redoundeth to them, and thereby consisteth their suretye and conservation: thother is, the contribution of thayde to His Majeste upon the Frenchmens invasion this last yere, wherein His Majeste thinketh they ought not gretly to stick, seing that by the treatye it is due, and that both they there and thAmbassador here hath confessed the same, and therefor prayeth you to travaill therein as moch as you may conveniently. And, in cace you shall see it grevous unto them to disburse any sommes of money, His Highnes can be contented, whereas thEmpereur hath certain men of warre in garrison at his chardge upon his frountiers towards Fraunce, to take in recompence the service of so many of them, and for such a tyme, as shalbe equivalent to thayde which thEmpereur ought to gyve to His Majeste, soo that His Highnes may have the same when He will requyre them, and that they may be ordred by His Generall when they shall cum. And this overture is in dede so reasonable, as His Highnes thinketh thEmpereur hath cause to embrace the same, for hereby shall be putt to no new charge more thenne He woold be at, though this demaund wer not. And also His Majeste wilbe pleased, for the conservation of thEmpereurs preudhomie towards the French King, to have the thing knowen non otherwise to the woorld, but that the sayd men of warre of thEmpereurs do serve at His Majestes own charge; and so they shall indede, for His Majeste therefor forbearerth that somme of money which, wer not their service, He shuld of right have. And yet, to saye the trouthe, if thEmpereur woold throughly consyder and waye thestate, wherin He standeth at this present with the French King, and what advauntage He might now have against Him, if He woold use it, He shall perceyve it moost for his benefite to breke with Him by tyme; for surely, whensoever the French King, or his sonne after Him, shall see their commodyty, they will undoubtedly set uppon Him when He shall looke leest for it; for now at this laste talke that I, the Secretary, had at Calays with the Frenchmen, it was a great pece of their travail to have reduced His Majeste to a leage offensive, and of the gretest cause of our breking of, bicaus His Majeste woold in no wise accorde therunto. His Majeste woold wishe that you, my Lord of Wynchester, shuld of your self worke therein according to your former instructions, which we trust be arryved with youe alredy, asmoch as you can possible to enduce thEmpereur to these warres, and to declare unto Him, as of yourself, that now sithens His Majeste is in ennemyte with the French King, if thEmpereur woold, before thennemy cum to the feld, prevente the same with a Lieutenaunt, and a moch lesse armey then He did at the last invasion, in such part as He shuld think most commodious for his affayres, His Majeste woold be contented to send his Lieutenaunt also to set upon sum other parte, for his commodyty; wherby both Their Majestes, as you do verily think, and can in reason non otherwise conceyve, may enforce the French King to the satisfaction of both their desyres, and to what condicions They liste, and thEmpereur recover thereby also Hedyn, which shuld be no litle estimation to Him in the woorld, for thennemye is now well tyred alredy, and his cuntrey, as they knowe, sore wasted and gretly destitute both of men and money, and all his holdes unfurneshed both of munition and victuales; which, if at this tyme be pretermitted, mitted, and that His Majeste and the French King shuld fortune to agree, as they might lawfully, before thEmpereurs entree the warre, or declare Himself, could not peraventure so facily be had then. And if thEmpereur will take this waye, His Majeste hath a meane to help to get Him such an entre in to Fraunce, if He will gyve herkenyng therto and folow the [same], whereby [He may] passe over the Somme, when He wil, and wher it be his, easely to be by Him defended; which is a strong toun frontier to Him upon the Somme called Corbye, which you doubt not, being ones in the warre, He woold be glad to get in to his handes with thexpenses of no small sommes of money. Mary, if He mynde this warre, as the woorld speketh, and the Frenchmen look now that He will, He must go roundely to work, and begyn very shortly. His Majeste eftsones prayeth you, my Lord of Wynchestre, as of yourself, to work with all your witt in this mater for the compas of the same with all dexterite possible, which His Highnes will take in as good part as any service that ever you did Him.

As touching thoverture of mariage, wherin His Majestes pleasour was signified lately unto youe at large, His Highnes, wishing them to think that He woold gladly all thinges were done that might establishe assuredlye their freendship and amitye togidres, willeth you to signifye unto them, that if they minde in dede the mater, as they saye they doo, and will have such consyderation of His Majestes honour in that mater, as reason and their amitye dothe requyre, there shalbe no fault in Him, but the thing shall take place and go forwarde. And therefor, if it shall [please] thEmpereur to se sende hither nowe about Candelmas for the maters of custume, as may treate also of that mater, being sufficiently instructed for the same, and having commission for a larger overture, His Majeste will procedde asfar furth as He may with reason and honour; and woold wishe, so as it shuld not seame to cum from hens, that Mons^r Skipperus had the chardge committed unto him, the setting forward of whom He leaveth to your discretion, to be used as oportunitie shall requyre. And, if you can bring to passe thayde, or that which is requyred in lieu therof, and thobligation of the touns or States, with the commyn invasion, His Majeste woold that you, my Lord of Wynchestre, shuld return furthwith, and be better wolcum then you wer for any message you brought a gret while: and, in cace you think you can not shortly bring it to passe, that His Majeste woold that sumwhat the lenger you shuld demoure, and advertise His Majeste what aunswer and likelyhode you shall receyve; and, in cace you receyve the ratification, to sende the same hither in the meane season. And, whereas His Majeste

sendeth thither at this present certayn his factours for provision of certayn grayn, powder, and other munition, His Majeste prayeth you to travaile with them there to permit unto us [to have] proportions of the same, as may be there conveniently spared. Of the purveours of corne we doubt not but you have herd of this, and Daunsel returneth shortly to you for provision of the rest, praying you to advaunce their requestes for His Majeste asmuch as may be.

Finally, you must signifye there, that His Majeste, being enformed both from hens and here that Curtpennink (who came hither to presente his service) is a good man of warre, and of long experience in the same, hath reteyned him to his servaunt, and to bring at this tyme certayn fotemen. And, albeit His Highnes hath herd that the same is not much favoured of th'Empereur nor his Counsaile for his behaviour towards them in tyme past, yet now His Majeste doubteth not but that from hensforth, and specially being in His Highnes service, he will so use himself as th'Empereur nor none of his shall have just cause to be offended with him; and therefore His Majeste prayeth th'Empereur, for his sake, to forget all thinges by past, and to let him have his favour agayne, and specially at this tyme, having chardge for His Majeste; wherein if he should be interrupted, th'Empereur should not do displeasure to Curtpennink, but to His Majeste, whose affaires should be hindered by the same

. His Majeste thinketh that by receyving of this man He hath done rather a benefite to th'Empereurs affaires, then an hinderaunce; for, seeing that he is a man of an auncient knoweledge and experience in the warre, might have bene perhaps reteyned of some of th'Empereurs enemies, and now being His Majestes servaunt, th'Empereur may be sure rather to have service then hinderaunce at his hande. And as for the men which he shall bring to serve His Majeste, the same shall passe in small companies, to thintent they shall not engrieve or damage th'Empereurs subiectes, trusting therfor that they shalbe honestly used in their passage and without displeasure or contradiction. And thus fare &c. At Hamptoncours, 26 January, 1545.

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime. Vicesima hujus mensis unas ad Majestatem Vestram hinc dedi litteras, quas commode ad Majestatem Vestram perlatas esse spero. Medio tempore Hessiaci Commissarij modo hic agentes mihi indicarunt, sibi injunctum a suo Principe esse, ut sequentia mihi Majestatem Vestram significanda dicerent. Quandoquidem pacem inter Majestatem Vestram et Gallorum Regem necdum (quod tamen admodum cuperet) confectam Lantgravius audiret, Suam Celsitudinem pro veteri amicitia et observantia erga Vestram Majestatem, Cui prosperos et felices successus undequaque precaretur, non intermittere voluisse, quin amanter Majestatem Vestram præmoneret, ut siquos forte capitaneos ex Germania conducere velit, ut hoc juditio et delectu adhibito faciat; nam hoc genus Thrasonum passim se venditare et prostituere solere, et hec descripta nomina² voluit Majestati Vestræ significari, ne ab hijs Majestati Vestræ imponatur. Tum, si Majestas Vestra alicui conscribendi militem mandatum dederit in Germania, ut eundem hijs Statibus notum facere velit, et hoc ideo ne hij Status ignari pro quo miles conscribatur, delectum remorentur vel impedian, suspicantes contra se ab eorum adversarijs hunc militem cogi, adeoque imprudentes in Majestatem Vestram peccent, inutilesque sumptus ipsi contra ex adverso faciant, nam et modo hic in confinibus duo capitanei palam spargunt se habere mandatum conscribendi militis pro Vestra Majestate. Hec Lantgravius voluit ut Majestati Vestre significarem, Sueque Celsitudinis amicam voluntatem et offitia Majestati Vestre addicerem: ipse quoque Lantgravius et Elector Palatinus intra dies tres hic aderunt. Legatio a Palatino Saxone et Brandenburgensi Electoribus modo Coloniam advenit; que, ubi apud Senatum Coloniensem et capitulum summi Templi caussam Electoris Coloniensis egerit, aget autem pro concordia inter eos restauranda, recta illinc ad Cesarem proficiscetur, apud quem pro horum temporum gravibus et exitialibus dissidijs et dissensionibus componendis in Imperio aget. Tum intercessura quoque est pro Electore Coloniensi, ne Cesar contra hunc gravi et inaudito per Imperium exemplo extra Imperium in jus vocatum procedere judicialiter in contumaciam velit; nam hoc ut dignitati et libertati Imperij derogat, ita quoque contra sacramentum a Cesare Electoribus factum de eorum et Imperij libertate

Tum Archiepiscopi Coloniensis quoque negotium hec legatio aget, oratura ut Imperator hanc litem contra eundem institutam coram Electoribus et Principibus Imperij dijudicare velit, ejusque delationis criminationes accuratius expendere: ut que hijs Statibus quoque omnibus cum hoc reo communes sint, nec se hunc Archiepiscopum in communi religionis causa deserere posse. Basfonteyn, Gallicus quidam nobilis, ante triduum huc advenit, qui apud Saxonicos et Hessiacos se in amicitiam insinuat, Regis sui benevolentiam et studia erga hos Status prædicans et magnificiens. Capitaneus quoque Reekroed adhucdum hic commoratur, verum nihil dum ab ijs publice coram Statibus actum est. Elector Maguntinus suum suffraganium ex Concilio Tridentino revocavit, qui dicit Concilium ad Dominicam Letare¹ prorogatum esse. Ex Colloquio Ratisbonensi nihil dum auditur. HENRY VIII.¹

SALUTEM Domino. Serenissime, Potentissimeque Rex, Domine clementissime. Intelleximus in hoc Conventu nostro, quid Regia Majestas Vestra, per suos Oratores Dominum Buclerum et Christofferum Mont, illustrissimo Principi Hessorum ad eos artículos, qui à delectis quibusdam Consiliarijs superiori tempore Vormatiæ illis ipsis Majestatis Vestræ Oratoribus dati sunt, responderit: et unà etiam ex eodem responso accepimus Vestræ Majestatis erga illustrissimos Principes et Dominos nostros benevolam et promptam voluntatem et gratificandi studium. Quod, ut nobis fuit gratissimum, ità meritò Regiæ Majestati Vestræ, nomine Principum et Dominorum nostrorum, maximas habemus et agimus gratias; qui vicissim veterem amicitiam et observantiam ergà Majestatem Vestram haud dubiè summo studio conservaturi sunt. Nosque eis cum ea, quæ Vormatiæ cum Majestatis Vestræ Oratoribus acta sunt, tum quæ Majestas Vestra nuper renunciavit, diligentissime referemus. Hoc vero Majestati Vestræ jam significandum duximus, illustrissimos Principes et Dominos nostros in Concilium, seu potius Conciliabulum, à Romano Episcopo, pro revocanda stabilienda et confirmanda ipsius tyrannide, et impijs abusibus, Tridenti indictum, nullo modo consensuros, sed justissimis de causis eidem reclamatueros esse. Facillimè enim licet judicare Romanum Episcopum in prædicto Concilio magis hoc curaturum, ut arrogatam sibi superioritatem et tyrannidem restauret et retineat, quam ut veram Ecclesiæ reformationem, à qua sedes illa alienissima est, promoveat. Quod haud dubiè Regia Majestas Vestra pro sua excellenti sapientia quoque perpendet. Quam rogamus, ne ad tale Concilium suum consensum præbeat, sed potius toti orbi Christiano notum faciat et testificetur, se hoc Romani Pontificis suspectissimum Concilium non agnoscere, nec pro tali Concilio habere, in quo possint controversiæ in religione ortæ decidi, et salutaris Ecclesiæ reformatio institui; quemadmodum superioribus annis Majestas Vestra de simili Concilio, Mantuæ indicto, scripto edicto testificata est; et pro sua autoritate Rempublicam Christianam opera et consilio adjuvet, ut salva Evangelij doctrina vera Ecclesiæ reformatio instituatur. Ac illustrissimos Principes et Ordines conjunctos, sicut hactenus fecit, amanter et benignè sibi commendatos habeat. Quorum offitia, studium, observantia, MCCCX. THE AMBASSADORS OF THE PROTESTANTS to KING HENRY VIII.

SALUTEM. Serenissime, potentissimeque Rex, Domine clementissime. Legati, quos comuniter ad Majestatem Vestram et ad Galliæ Regem Autumno superiore Principes ac Domini nostri miserant, diligenter ac sincere nobis ordine commemorarunt, quid actum sit in hac omni causa propter quam fuerant missi. Et quoniam eventus non respondit expectationi nostræ ac desyderio, quod ad publicam orbis quietem, et privatim ad utriusque Majestatum Vestrarum dignitatem et emolumentum erat accommodatum, dolorem certè ex ea re percepinus non mediocrem: et hoc solum habemus intereà solatij, quod speramus Deum, Qui pacis est author, pro sua infinita misericordia concessurum esse majores occasiones, ut quod nunc fieri non potuit, aliquando perficiatur; quod quidem Principibus et Dominis nostris longè sit gratissimum. Jam vero quantum ad hoc pertinet, quod Majestas Vestra suis in literis datis 30 die Decembris scribit, de conservanda mutua et vetere amicitia, gratias agimus ingentes Majestati Vestræ nomine nostrorum Principum et Dominorum, qui simul dabunt operam, ut quam hactenus habuit de illis opinionem, ejus ne Ipsam pœniteat. Nec vero dubitamus, quum Majestas Vestra quoque singulari fide et benevolentia semper complectetur eos, quorum studia cognovit hactenus ergà Ipsam promptissima.

MCCCXI. BRUNO to PAGET.¹

MONSEIGNEUR. Je vous supplie vouloir en premier lieux faire mes treshumbles recommandations a la Serenissime Majeste du Roy. En oultre que pour la grande clemence et liberalite, Sa Majeste a par vous usez et demonstre a moy sans lavoïr deservy, que pour ladvenir tous les services je pouldre faire a Sa Majeste le fera fidelement et comme vous trouverez en effect.

Monsieur, pour vous avertir aulcunement de lestat des affaires de pardeça, vous plaira scavoir que nous sommes treuvez tous quatre en ce lieux de Franckfort le 3^e de ce moys. Incontinent appelez de Monseigneur le Landgrave de Hesse, fut faict par moy ample relation audict Seigneur en la presence du Sieur Jacob Sturmé: et le lendemain devant toute l'Assemblée des Commys et Deputez Protestans. Et vous prometz, Monsieur, que tous en general et particulier ont estez bien mariz, et meismement le Seigneur Palatin Electeur, qui pour le jour estoit party dicy d'avoir entanduz que la bonne enterprinse de nous estatz par nostre negotiation navoit sortiz en milleur yssue, pour plusieurs raisons concernantes le bien publicque de la Christiente, voyants comme Princes et estatz prudents le respecte du temps qui court. Mais puis quensy est fault remettre le tout a la Divine disposition. Sy es je scez nosdicts estats bien desirant, que sy encor il estoit possible a trouver quelcque expedient de parvenir a ung sy grant bien, quilz ne vouldroient esparnier ny peine ny depanse ; sy non, ilz demeureront neutre tant du coste d'Angleterre que de France. Et ce sy longuement la presente guerre durera entre ces deux Princes, pource que dung sy bon zele ilz sen sont mesle et declarez mediateurs, comme aussy il appert par les lettres lesdicts estats escrivent ausdicts deux Princes en pareilles forme et substance.

Monsieur, je trove nos estatz encor grandement, et plus quilz ne furent oncques, enclins et desirantz, pour certaines causes et raisons concernant le bien de Sa Majeste. La presente guerre et dune si dangereuse fin puisse estre extraincte et terminee par nosdicts estatz : et pour ce faire puy il se tiendra de reschieff une aultre journee par nosdicts estats a Wormbs au premier jour d'Avril prochain. Vous me manderez, sy vous plaist (ce pendant) par le voye de Monsieur le Docteur Mont, sy vous sembleroit bon de remettre a ladicte journee les fers au feuz de nostre precedante negotiation ; et sil seroit bon ce pendant, je escrivasse aussy a Ma Dame Destampes pour dissentir d'elle, comme de moyneisme, sil seroit possible a trouver quelque moderation quant au faict des Escossoys, car quant au reste des differents je ny trove difficulte, que ne soit resolvable par nosdicts estatz à lhonneur et proffit de Sa Majeste.

Quant au besoigne de ceste journee, scaurez le tout par le mesmez, par ledict Sieur Mont, que me garde vous en escrire davantage.

Vous estes assez averti, le Palantin Electeur le 10^e du moys passez a permis par tout le Palantinois labolition de la Messe Papisticque, et a commande dinstituer les ceremonies a lusage de nous eglises dont en soit louez le saint nom de Dieu. Je tiens aussy ledict Prince avec plusieurs aultres confederez et alliez avec les nostres.

Le Duc de Brunschwig est toujours prisonnier a Zigenhan, et son fils es mains du Landtgrave, mais le filz au lieux de Marpurck. Le Duc Moritz de Sachsshen, comme bon Prince, a la prier du parente dudict de Brunschwig, a fort et diligemment icy, par les siens, sollicitez la delivrance dudict pare et filz, mais rien obtenuz.

Les trois Princes Electeurs, Palantin, Sachsshen, et Brandebourg, ont encore avec tous les Protestans une legation vers la Majeste Imperiale dicy en hors a la faveur de l'Archevesque de Colloingne, pour conjunctement supplier Sa Majeste vouloir faire cesser des poursuittes, lon ly faict a cause de la religion, &c. ; et sont tous bien deliberez de point permettre ny endurer ledict Prince soit moleste du Pape, ny de ses adherans.

Lon a dict icy, que le Pape Paule estoit mort du 3^e de Janvier, mais les nouvelles ne suivent point, parquoy je croy que nen est rien.

Le Duc de Saphoie avoit commence a ce remuer contre le Roy de France

France en Piedmont, et prin de force (comme lon dit) deux chasteaux pareillement commence contre les Suyces, ceulx de Berne pres de Jeneffe; mais le bruiet ce pace.

Le Roy de France envoie le Prince de Melffe¹ en Piedmont pour son Lieutenant.

Le Corronel François George de Rickenrodt est encor icy, qui a prin grosse peine dinduyre le Landtgrave et aultres estatz plus du couste de son maistre, que du vostre; mais je scez il nay rien faute en cela, car jay ouy parle Monseigneur le Lantgrave, et les aultres des principales, de quelles intention il sont, et combien ilz soient encor des gents apres ledict Seigneur Landtgrave pour le randre plus favorable, sy es quilz laborent en vain a mon jugement: nonobstant sy troveray je bon, le Roy Serenissime se declarast tousjours amys a noz estatz: comme il a faict jusque a present, et que Sa Majeste ne se declaire aulcunement contre ces estatz, et Sa Majeste les trouvera assurément en la reciproque: aultremment Sa Majeste les pouldroit contraindre a lautre partie a son prejudice; que jamais ne se fera sy Sa Majeste demeure en ceste bonne volonte envers eulx, comme tousjours jusque icy.

Il est grandt bruiet entre nous estatz; et est chose vraye, que le Marquis Albrecht de Brandenburg a retenuz jusque a Pacque mil chevaulx, en donnant 5 florins pour checque chevaulx jusque audict terme; que cause une grande suspicion a nous estatz, combien ledict Prince soit de nostre religion: maignant que ce ne soit pour l'Empereur contre l'Arschevesque de Colloingne; pour aultant ilz ont bien avertissement que le Pape, l'Empereur, et le Roy Ferdinand, soient confederez a entreprendre contre nosdicts estatz; mais les nostres comme moimiesme nen croient rien, que l'Empereur doibve faire entreprendre quelque chose contre les estatz de l'Empire. Daulcuns presument que ladicte levee est pour le service du Roy Serenissime.

Monsieur, je vous supplie me faire ce bien, et tant se fier en moy, que sy ladicte retenue dudict Marquis est pour le Roy, me le vouloir signifier en secret, affin je puis prevenir que nous estatz ne se mettent a une depanse sans propos, et aussy lon ne ly face empeschement en sa levee. Car je suis assure quant Sa Majeste vouldra avoir gents, et que lon soit assure ce soit pour icelle que lon ny mettra empeschement, aussy ne feront ilz au Roy de France, les choses demeurantes es termes elles sont, parquoy je euisse bien desirer avec plusieurs bons personaiges de nostre ligue. Sa Majeste se feust joing plus pres davec eulx. Et panse assurément Sa Majeste sen fust trover en plus grande assurance et repos, que avec daultres.

Lon ne scet aultre chose du colloque, sinon que nest encor commence combien les personnaiges Deputez et Comis y soient de loing temps.

Depuis hier sont venuz nouvelles icy, que l'Empereur veult il ayle en avant, et aussy en brieff Sa Majeste viendra en Allemaigne pour tenir la journee Imperiale au lieux de Ratispone, combien y nen est encor aultre apparence.

Quant au Concille de Trent, y sont audiet lieux trois Cardinaulx, de Monte, Sainte Cruces, et Polus, avec 31 Evesque, lesquels tous ensemble ont desja tenuz duas Sessiones. Lon dict aussy que le Pape leust volunte transfere a Rome, ou postpone pour quelque tempes ; mais que la Majeste Imperiale veult y soit continue audiet Trente.

Il est aussy bruict que la Majeste Imperiale a depuis peu de temps retenuz bon nombre de capitaines ; mais y se faict encor point de levee de gents de guerre.

Ne aussy pour le Roy de France nest nouvelle de faire amasse de personne. Ledict Rickerod, Corronel pour ledict Seigneur, faict semblan de se vouloir tenir icy pour quelque temps, comme il est vraysemblable jusque adce y voye, que vouldront faire et l'Empereur et le Roy Serenissime. Vray est, que ledict Rickerodt assure bien, et retient daulecuns capitaines, en leur faisant les promesses de les employer, mais il ny a encor argent, ny aultre provision.

Jay bien entendu de Monseigneur le Landtgrave, quil est fort mory et mal content de Reffenberger, lequell de Reffenberg avec son compaignon Eytelwolff sont presentement en la Court de l'Empereur. Et me dit ledict Prince Landtgrave, que lon ly avoit dit, que la Majeste Imperiale avoit donne audiet de Reiffenberg trois villaiges depuis peu de temps apres de Colloingne, quest au lieux ou il a faict les moustres pour le Roy.

Aultre chose nay pour le present, que merite lescrivre. Car la reste se fera par ledict Sieur Mont. Synon, je prie le Createur apres mavoir humblement recommande a vostre bonne grace, vous doint, Mons^r, ce que desirez. A Franckfort, ce 8^e de Febrier, lan 1546.

MCCCXII. SLEIDAN to PAGET.¹

SALUTEM. Vicesima sexta Januarij pervenimus Argentinam, magnifice Domine, itinere admodum difficili et molesto. Commorati ibi per paucos dies huc profecti sumus, et duobus ab oppido milliaribus obviam habuimus Palatinum Comitem, Electorem, qui in colloctionem hinc cum Lantgravio venerat. Illicò, post quam huc venimus, qui fuit tertius dies Februarij, Lantgravius ut ad se veniremus jussit, et in multam usque noctem diligenter quid egissemus auscultavit. Referebat autem Dominus Bruno, et ità quidem, ut privati affectus nullam daret significationem. Postridie verba fecit in eandem sententiam in pleno Senatu Legatorum Protestantium, qui nunc etiam ad Regem Serenissimum scribunt, mihique ut in eam sententiam scriberem mandarunt. Dolet eis admodum nihil effectum esse, et quorsum hoc dissidium spectet, prudenter vident. Palatinus Elector ad nostrorum ordinum religionem accessit. Lantgravius, à vicino Moguntino Archiepiscopo rogatus cum hinc discederet, biduum prope cum ipso fuit. Coloniensis constanter agit, et nostri ordines illum habent curæ, et nunc adeo legationem pro ipso miserunt ad Cæsarem. Quanquam nihil dubito, quin copiosius hæc omnia perscribant alij, tamen ut intelligas, Magnifice Domine, me tuæ virtutis et humanitatis summæ perpetuam habere memoriam, non potui committere, quin Domino Montio has ad te darem, obsecrans ut apud Serenissimum Regem nostri amanter memineris, et historicum illud negotium Ei commendes. Cum absolvero aliquid Ejus conspectu dignum, mittam istuc. Vale. Datum Francoforti, 8 Februarij, 1546.

MCCCXIII. MONT to PAGET.¹

QUE modo in hijs Comitijs acta sunt, Ornatissime Domine Pagethe, subinde vobis significavi, et animadverto horum Statuum magnam consensionem et concordiam esse; hancque confederationem multo melius habere ac sperare quam ante hac unquam: cum enim modo quatuor Electores in confessione hujus doctrine conjuncti sint, spes est et in consilijs et alijs suffragationibus eos adversariorum multitudine non pręgravari. Reliqui quoque Status et maxime Episcopi vident, quam pax sibi necessaria sit: si enim hec religionis dissensio in bellum (quod Deus avertat) erumpat, vident se primos omnibus periculis expositos esse, tum ipsorum amicorum quoque gravem et inæqualem conjunctionem sibi exitio fore; vident enim totius hujus belli onus in se procumbere: tum Hispani militis superbia perfidia et inexplēbilis rapacitas toti Germanie notissima est; et quis tandem civilis hujus belli exitus futurus sit, ut maxime dubium est, ita utricunque parti victoria cesserit, non incruenta sentiet. Mirum, quam hij Status omnes, et inprimis Elector Palatinus et Lantgravius, doleant pacem non confectam esse inter Serenissimum Regem et Gallum; vident enim hoc bellum tum ijs duobus regnis, tum universo orbi Christiano ingenti damno et detrimento esse, Gallici hic agentes, capitaneus Reckroed et Basfonteyn, se quam maxime possunt apud omnes hos Status insinuant, Regis sui benevolentiam et benemerendi voluntatem amplissime prædicantes, et hijs Statibus pollicentes: sed perfectissime scio hos Status longe propensioribus animis in Serenissimum Regem quam Gallum esse, et hoc propter communem societatem, quam habent simul contra Romanum Episcopum, omnis religionis et pietatis hostem: hij quoque passim Serenissimum Regem incusarunt, non consecutæ pacis, verum Oratores reversi omnibus Statibus rem longe secus habere significarunt. Hosque Principes et Status omnes nihil vel laboris vel impendij recusaturos scio, si certa aliqua conficiendæ pacis ratio inveniri posset; quotidie ex me in hoc Conventu ex primis Statibus quesitum est, nunquid aut litterarum aut mandati ex Serenissimo Rege haberem. Ad primum diem Aprilis hij Status Conventum iterum indixerunt (si non successerint Imperialia Comitia) Wormatie, ut omnibus casibus qui per estatem contingere possent occurrant: fertur quoque Palatinum et Coloniensem Episcopum eo in personis adventuros. Processus ille, a Cesare contra Electorem Coloniensem institutus, mire omnium animos offendit, et plane sancitum est eum socijs et communibus armis contra vim illatam defendendum; optimam enim integritatis et probitatis existimationem apud optimos quosque habet. Varij hic rumores de Cesare sparguntur: partim aiunt Eum magnas contra Protestantes conscribere copias, et Eum primo in Coloniensem copias educturum; partim affirmant conscriptas copias contra Gallum profecturas: sed crebræ litteræ ex Italia ad hos Status mittuntur, que sedulo monent nihil Cesari fidendum, Eum enim et Romanum Episcopum bellum contra Protestantes moliri. Audio Reyffenbergium illum, qui superiori anno nequiter se adversum Serenissimum Regem gessit, modo a Cesare conductum esse ad militem conscribendum. Lantgravius summa indignatione et odio eum persequetur. Fama huc allata est de Romani Episcopi morte, que tamen non satis certa est. Exhibite mihi sunt littere Braunsuicensis Ducis in Cancellaria Lantgravij ad Romanum Episcopum scriptæ, quibus significavit prosperos belli successus, ac propediem se Lantgravium exturbaturum: vicissim quoque larga illi auxilia a Papa pollicita sunt.

¹ Mont wrote on the same day to the King, informing Him of the conferences of the Elector Palatine and the Landgrave with the Deputies of the other Protestant Princes and States, and of the anxiety felt on account of the treaty with France having failed. He states that the Protestants had on the 9th dissolved the meeting at Franckfort, and appointed to meet at Worms on the 1st of April.

MCCCXIV. GARDYNER, &c. to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASITH it Your most Excellent Majeste to understand, that having receyved letters from Your Highnes Counsayl of the 15th of the last moneth, the 26th of the same we spake with Mons^r de Grandvela, both concernyng the obligations of the townes and nobles ; and also discoursed with hym the present astate of thinges, wherby, of our selves, to procure them to the warre against Fraunce, and at the lest to obteyne of thEmperour graunte of sum noble personnage, unto whom Your Highnes might trust to have the leading of men, to serve Your Highnes ; and likewise spake of the matier of maryage, as was divided in the said letters. In al which poyntes, after long communications, we coulde bring hym to noon other pointe but that he wold speke with thEmperour, which we toke for a very cold answer, and thought mete upon the next occasion to speke with thEmperour Hymself.

In this meane tyme, upon Candelmesse even, arryved letters from Your Majesties Counsayl, with the ratification, and thenne we knewe certaynly thEmperour wold departe the next morowe after Candelmasse, as He did in dede ; and therfor, to execute the more earnestly Your Majesties commaundement, determyned that we, the Bishoppes of Winchester and Westmester, shuld desire to speke with thEmperour, as we did, and had audience upon Candelmesse daye at night.

At our accesse to thEmperour we made Your Majesties most affectuous commendations, which He receyved very thankfully. We tolde Hym of the ratification, and Your Highnes gracious contentement for the matier of marchauntes, which He semed to be moch glad of, and excused Hymself that He had not yet signed his ratification, but He wold doo with al spede. We proponed unto Hym the article of the bande of the townes and nobles, which He misliked not, but said He wold speke therof with his Counsayl ; wherby appered that Mons^r Grandvela had said nothing of it. ThEmperour was very pleasaunte and familier with us, and I, the Bishop Winchester, with preface of a zeale I beare the comen affayres of both Your Majesties, albeit I doubted not but thEmperour did of Hymself consider his thinges, yet I coulde not forbere to put Hym in remembraunce of them. I told Hym I thought He ment the quiet of Christendom, which the French King troblyth ; and how moch thEmperour hath doone soo to tempre the French King, it appered in his last bargayn with Fraunce, wherin He had graunted so moch to the French King,

King, wherby to obteyn his frendship, as was incredible He wold have doon ; which I thought neverthelesse, if the Duke of Orlyaunce had lyved, He wold have perfourmed ; and yet nowe God hath taken awaye the Duke of Orlyaunce, and soo, without thEmperours acte, that matier is disapoynted, the French King forgettith al, and not oonly forbereth to doo that He is bounde, but also hath practised with Your Majestie to procure Your Highnes to entre warre against Hym. At this poynte thEmperour interrupted my tale, and said He byleved it, for likewise they doo sollicite Hym to warre against Your Highnes. I put thEmperour thenne in remembraunce of thopportunitie of this tyme, if He wold applie his force to bring the French King to reason. I shewed Hym, if He entred nowe, He shuld fynde Your Majestie not yet weryed, but freshe and courageus to serch the French King further, insomoch as I thought, if thEmperour wold with a Lieutenaunt invade Fraunce, Your Majestie wold doe the semblable, which two puissaunces at oone tyme, being nowe the French King in this bassenesse and penurie, and the frountiers soo wasted, shuld be meane to bring the French King to reasonable conditions ; which thing if thEmperour shuld delaye, many opportunites shuld passe, and specially oone, that at this tyme Your Highnes hath a good frontier towne of the French Kinges in practise to be had, which thEmperour may have by Your Highnes meanes, and therby have good entre in to the countrie ; and this tyme passed over, Your Highnes, being at libertie to take peace with Fraunce, may, upon sum chaunce or elles reasonable consideration, be induced to take peace, in which cace thEmperour shal have the French King more difficile and harde to medle with. At this thEmperour said, "Vous avez raison," and said, He must have against the French King a honnorable cause to the worlde, and also set sum staye in Germany. As to the honnorable cause, I told Hym that He never had more honnorable nor more evident, thenne for the restitution of the Duke of Savoy, which the French King refusyth. And the Duke of Savoye, seyng this tyme to be mete to helpe Hym, hath caused overtore to be made to us to be sent and signified to Your Highnes, wherby he declareth an opportunitie to make an entre on the French King on that side, and perceyveth wel that Your Highnes, desisting from the warre, or he attempte any thing, his matiers shalbe desperate. And thenne I said further to thEmperour, that al the worlde thought He wold make warre, and the French men also loked for it ; and, if He take not his opportunitie with them, which is nowe, they wyl not prettermitte any occasion they maye have with Hym or his sonne. ThEmperour harde me very favorably, as He semed not to myslike the matier ; and for answer said, the matier was gret and weighty, weighty, and He wold commen with his Counsayl of it, and they shuld further speke with us in it. ThEmperours countenance was soo pleasaunte with us, that it was noted of our servauntes, such as wer suffred to cumme in to the Pryvie Chambre.

We moved thEmperour to shewe Your Majestie that gratuite, as to suffre sum of his captaines and subgettes, in the parties nere, to serve Your Highnes, for a soden enterprise. ThEmperour said He wold preferre captaynes to Your Highnes service, but they wyl derobbe al; mary, He thought they wold serve Your Highnes truely. We told Hym we had harde of them, but we ment to have captaynes of his Lowe Countries, with sum of his garrysons. ThEmperour said He might not doo soo, for thenne the French King wolde take it for a brech on thEmperours bihault: howbeit, He wold speke with his Counsayl in it.

We entred thenne communication of the mariage by repetyng to Hym that, al other matiers for our parte expedited, that oonly rested; wherin, if He wold send commission in to England, I trusted ther might be sumwhat doone, soo He wolde furnishe the ladye with a dote as to such a Prince is requisite. ThEmperour asked, whither we had harde any thing of it from Your Majestie. We said that we had harde that Your Highnes liked the overture, but the specialties of the dote be soo megre, as they of your Counsayl, such as favour the matier, have not thought good to speke of them. ThEmperour said, howe the King of Romaines had many doughters, and hath been exhausted with the warres. "But, Sire," quod we, "Ye mary her as " your owne doughter, and ar able to set her forth accordingly." ThEmperour smyled, and said He had doughters of his own to marye, which wer chargeable. We said we doubted not but, considering al thinges, He wold have such respecte as wer convenient. ThEmperour said He was desirous of it, and soo was his brother and suster both; concluding that He wold therin speke with Grandvela. As for my Lord Princes vertues, as they be most pleasaunt and joyful to talke on and reaporte, soo have we pretermitted noo occasion to speke of them with thEmperour, his Counsayl, and other; which matier Grandvela takith for an argument to charge us Your Majesties Counsaillours, to sue to Your Highnes that soo noble a Prince may be provided in soo noble a parentage as is this, oonly mete for hym, having beautie and education agreable for the same; and with thiese gaye wordes avoydith the encrease of the dote, without any precise denyal or certain graunte.

We spake also to thEmperour for Captayne Courtpenyng, as was signified to us Your Highnes pleasour was we shuld. ThEmperour knewe the man, and said He coulde lede fotemen, and semed to make noo difficultie, but yet said He wold speke to Grandvela of hym: and herwith we departed from Hym with a very good hoope in al thinges.
and

Incontinently after our departure thEmperour sent for Grandvela, who taryed with Hym that evenyng tyl nyne of the klok, for we sent to his house twice in the tyme to have spoken with hym, and he was not come hom. As we conjecture, thEmperour was sumwhat touched with that matier of the warre, which in dede is of importaunce for Hym to consider presently, and was more earnestly and playnly opened by us, thenne liked Grandvela; who the next daye in the mornyng told me, the Bishop of Winchestre, that I had used a dexterite in openyng those matiers to thEmperour, and that thEmperour had answerd playnly. I told hym I had spoken playnly and thEmperour, and thEmperour answerd wisely, for He referred it to his Counsayl. Grandvela said thEmperour had told hym every circumstance, of the towne, of the frontiers, and al; "but," quod he, "thEmperour goth nowe in to Germany to " staye those matiers; and thenne," quod he, "we shal see. My Lord of " Westmester," quod he, "shalbe there, and I shal tel hym howe thinges " procede." ThEmperour, he said, had kept hym with Hym overnight, tyl nyne of the klok; "and," quod he, "where ye spake to thEmperour of the " Duke of Savoye, I assure youe," quod he, "he is able to doo nothing for " povertie," and howe thEmperour founde the Prynce of Pyemont at his charges. We told hym we knewe this to be trewe, and we did not speke of the Duke of Savoye as of oone that was of himself able, for such as make the overture for hym confesse it, and wold have that supplied; but bicause, if he wer able, he wold, and thinketh wisely this to be the very tyme, and wold take his tyme, whiles Your Highnes is in warre with Fraunce, and whiles Fraunce is soo basse; and therfor, if thEmperour wyl restore the Duke of Savoye, nowe is his tyme also. To this Grandvela said they shuld see nowe at ther being in Germanye, which he wold from tyme to tyme signifie to me, the Bishop of Westmestre: and further we coulde not get of hym in that matier.

As touching the bandes of the townes and nobles, he said the noblemen of thies parties wer not nowe with thEmperour; "but," quod he, "that matier " may be more largely considered hereafter; and we," quod he, "make hast " into Germany." ThEmperour, he said, was determyned to send Mons^r de Eke, Skepperus, to Your Highnes with commission for the mariage, and told us how moch the mariage was desired of thEmperour, the King of Romaynes, and the Quene. As concernyng men out of these Lowe Contres to serve Your Highnes at any soden nede, he said that thEmperour must nedes forsee that the French men have noo just matier of quarel in the tyme of his absence ; “but,” quod he, “here be other captaynes, which youe may have, “ and they wold gladly knowe whether ye wold have them or noo.” We told hym we had noo commission to retayne any captaynes, but we wold signifie to Your Highnes what he sayth therein.

We spake then to hym of Captayne Courtepenyng, and he said thEmperour had wylled hym to speke to the Quene of hym. We said we understode thEmperour was content in that pointe ; and Grandvela said he thought the man was banyshed thies countries, and therfor he must speke with the Quene in it ; and thenne told us howe the Bishop of Romes Nuncio had been with thEmperour with declaration of sum grief, that thEmperour was soo joyned with Your Highnes, unto whom thEmperour answerd, that He had bounde Himself to defende Your Highnes countries, and soo wold He doo against al men. And Grandvela said further, that where the Bishop of Rome thought to have had the cities of Parme and Placence established in the handes of his nephieu¹ by thEmperours confirmation, thEmperour hath stayed and delayed that matier. And here Grandvela added, that the Bishop of Rome shuld not have that he wenith to have, nor his matiers soo moch favered as he lokith for ; and the Counsayl, he said, which the Frenchmen sollicite against Your Highnes, we shuld not nede to care for it, and wylled us to assure Your Highnes therof.

And hitherto we differred to speke of thayde which they be bounde to paye Your Highnes, bicause we wold the more throughly here them in the rest ; and thenne, having told Grandvela of the receipt of the ratification, and of Your Highnes gracious acceptation of tharticles for the marchauntes, desired him nowe to remembre the subside and ayde, to rydde that matier. “Noo, noo,” quod he, “that matier is goone.” We asked hym, why ? “Mary,” quod he, “by this convenaunt.” “Why,” quod we, “did not we upon Newe “Yeres daye, at which tyme we fully agreed on al thinges, demaunde thayde, “and protest to youe that it shuld not be taken awaye by this convenaunt ? “wherupon youe toke upon youe to speke with thEmperour in the matier.” Here Grandvela waxed sodenly warme, and denyed al ; and we thought ourselves as strong to afferme truth, as he to denye it ; and, bicause it was truth, precisely affermed it, and therwith put hym in remembraunce what President Skore said at the same tyme, which although it was not wel said, yet it served for somoch to prove that we spake of it and demaunded it. Wherupon President Skore was called to us, and he remembred he sayde soo, but whether Grandvela toke upon to speke with thEmperour, he remembred not ; and Grandvela denyed it soo extremely, as for wordly policie it wer not expedient eyther for hym or Skepperus to cal it to remembraunce. And whenne Grandvela sawe it could not be denyed but it was spoken of, for soo farre went Skore with grauntyng that he said thenne, Grandvela said we spake not of it serio; we asked hym thenne, why he toke upon hym to speke with thEmperour, and thought it straunge to here, that we shuld not speke serio in soo serious a matier. And thenne we said that we playnly protested, that this convenaunt shuld not take awaye the ayde due; and yet, if we had not soo doone, the wordes of this convenaunt doo not extende unto it. Grandvela was in color, and said if we wold not soo take it, there was yet nothing doone, and in this contention departed; which troubled us not a lytel, and thEmperour was departed the towne, and Grandvela went by and by after Hym. And whenne we discoursed by conjecture what might be in the matier, we thought that Grandvela had not been best pleased with the bordyng of thEmperour soo playnly in the matier of warre, and, remembryng hymself, wold not cast of the matier thus. And yet we thought not good to make any meane to them, oonles we might have spoken with thEmperour; and the daye after thEmperour was departed, the wether waxed such, as it was thought thEmperour wold retourne hither.

The same daye at night Mons^r Skepperus sent his man to signifie that in the mornyng he wold repare to us. And soo he cam, and made gret intercession to me, the Bishop of Wynchester, to staye our wryting to Your Highnes, and thinges shuld here be framed wel ynough; and that evenyng repared unto me with thEmperours ratification, offering to delyver it, and receyve ours, which we wer content to doo, making this protestation, that we entende not, ne never intended, to remitte the ayde, but always reserved it. Skepperus said that he durst not admitte any such protestation, but he wold communicate the matier with Mons^r de Prate, and soo wryte to Grandvela, and trusted the matier shuld cumme to a good poynte. And soo we, at his desire, delayed the sending of our post to here that answer, which was retourned upon Sondaye, conteyning a gret discourse of reasons, with a resolution that the ratification shuld be delyvered unto us; soo as, if we protested, Skepperus shuld protest to the contrary, wherin Skepperus for his discharge conceyved his protestation after the forme of Grandvelas letters, wryten upon a consultation with the Quene and thEmperour in that matier. Upon the sight of that protestation, bicause we, considering it together, liked it not, I, the Bishop of Winchestre, reteyning the cotype and making a note of myslyking, sent the same agayn to Skepperus, with a letter soo wryten as he might, if he wold, send to Grandvella; the copyes of which protestation and letters we send herwith.¹

“Protestatur Reverendissimus Wintoniensis Episcopus, subsidium petatum non esse in hijs pactis contentis, in declaratione quorundam articulorum remissum, sed nihilominus deberi.
 “Super dictam protestationem respondendo ex parte Cesaree Majestatis protestatur Cornelius Scepperus, Cesaream Majestatem non teneri ad dictum subsidium, tam propter multas rationes, et etiam nonnullas previas conditiones, estate superiore Wormacie dictas et declaratas Oratori Serenissime Regie Majestatis Anglie ibi tunc agenti, que postea die xvij^{ma} Julij, ad Oratorem Cesaree Majestatis in Anglia agentem, ut Regie Majestati Anglie declararentur, scripte sunt, quam etiam vigore certi tractatus per ipsum Reverendissimum Wintoniensem in sua protestatione allegati. Quibus tamen non obstantibus præfata Cesarea Majestas contenta est, quod negotium istud videatur et discutiatur amicabiliter. Quod si præfatus Reverendissimus Wintoniensis, ijs prædictis, non contentus persistit debitum esse hujusmodi subsidium, similiter prædictus Scepperus, nomine quo supra protestando, quod non renunciando per Suam Majestatem dicto tractatui nuper concluso et allegato, nec aliquam in eo innovationem faciendo, et quod sequens oblatio non debeat accipi quasi Sua Majestas Cesarea ad dictum subsidium teneretur et obligaretur, offert prædicta Cesarea Majestas, casu quo conditionem, estate superiori præfati Serenissimi Regis Oratori, ut supra, Wormacie proposita et ad Oratorem Cesareum in Anglia agentem, die decima septima Julij scripte, effectum, ex parte Regie Majestatis Anglie sortiantur et observentur, eo casu se contentam esse, quod utrinque examinetur pro quanto tempore, dictum subsidium possit prætendi debitum esse, et quod Sua Majestas eidem satisfaciet, non dubitans quin hoc pacto reperiretur esse summa exigui momenti, et que non debeat, inter tantos Principes, tam sinceros amicos et confederatos, in disceptationem venire.”

This was accompanied by the following note to the Bishop:

“Reverendissime Presul. Mitto ad Dominationem Vestram formam protestationis nostræ, super qua poterit hac nocte cogitare. Subvirgula duas lineas, quas arbitrio ejusdem reliqui addendas aut diminuendas. Cras mane ad eam sum venturus quacunque volet hora. Interim felicem illi noctem precor.

The Bishop wrote in the margin of the protestation:

“Non placet in universum tua protestatio. Hec vero clausula ita repugnat ut meam protestationem omnino enervet, reliqua prorsus superflua sunt. Nos vero dicimus manere nobis causam integram subsidij petiti, nec pactis istis novis remitti, de quo etiam re integra primo die anni sumus protestati, et nunc repetimus ut vestræ de pactis interpretationi occurramus.

“Simpliciter, fide optima egimus atque aperte, id vero ne nobis officiat, precavere volumus protestatione.”

The following was the Bishop's answer to Scepperus:

“Magnifice Domine. Legi quod misisti, et quanto attentius considero, minus minusque placet, nec video quo consilio cupiat Grandvellanus ut istis protestationibus rem apertam obscuremus. Ista pacta ad subsidij causam pertinere, omnino negamus, utpote quibus non id agebatur, ut subsidij nomine debitum auferatur. Qua in re, ne quid ambigatur, Calendis Januarijs fecimus apud vos testatum, cum adhuc integrum vobis esset reclamare. Quo tempore Grandvellanus ad Cesaream Majestatem se id relaturum promisit. matier, thought good to wryte again to Grandvela, with request that we wold tary that answer, wherunto we condescended: and upon Wedonsday the 10th was retourned answer from Grandvela that thEmperour and Quene wer absent; and soo they wer in dede, and goon to Zutphania, by reason wherof Grandvela coude answer noon other then that he had bifore made. Upon knowlege wherof we determyned to depech our letters to Your Highnes, and thenne repared unto us Mons^r Skepperus again, and desired yet that we wold consider what we might and wold doo to take awaye this scrupule, arrisen by occasion of a hasty word of Mons^r Grandvela, wherof he wold take noo knowlege, but delyver thEmperours ratification, and take Your Highnes ratification with silence of al matiers; and if we spake, he must protest the contrary; which we for that tyme refused. For, seing Grandvela had said such wordes, we coude not passe over the matier for our parte in silence, ne wold gladly here spoken to the contrary; and yet thought requisite depely to consider al circumstaunces of the matier, and if it might possibly be, doo that might be for our discharge towardes Your Highnes, and also bring to conclusion theffecte of our commission by receyving the ratification. On the oone parte we wer resolved not to doo or consent to any thing, wherby we might appere to have exceded the limites of our commission from Your Majestie; and therfor, as we wer ordred by Your Majestie to demaunde the ayde, and not to remitte it, according wherunto we had also asked it diverse tymes, and at the conclusion of the matier protested that we wold not remitte it, by any wordes which we signified to Your Majestie, soo wold we not by any meanes relent therein, what soever shuld have ensued; and being the tyme of delyvery of ther ratification soo shorte, as we coulde not within that tyme consulte Your Majestie, and have answer again, we attended oonly to travayle with them here, to see to what pointe we coulde bring them. For, albeit we toke this denyal of Grandvela for a strange matier, and soo far out of al termes of honestie and reason, as for our owne stomakes we coulde have suffred thinges to cumme to extremities, yet we knewe not howe moch Your Highnes esteemed this conclusion, and to what purpose Your Highnes might use it, to the conducyng of Your Majesties affayres; and seing Your Highnes by this conclusion is content, for respectes, to departe from a gretter interest thenne is the matier of thayde, it might be Your Majestie wold not have this conclusion stayed therfor, although Your Majestie shuld soo departe from it. And we noted in the last letters sent from Your Highnes Counsayl, that we shuld aske the ayde asmoch as we conveniently might, which we toke for a restraincte of extremite, and I, the Bishop of Winchester, remembred my general commission to make fayre wether, which was very difficile in this tempest. But, al this notwithstanding, rather thenne we shuld be seen to offende Your Majestie, and, being appointed to aske and demaunde, to be soo negligent to remitte the same, if nothing coulde have been divised by us howe to preserve that the tyme shuld rather have passed, and soo thinges retourned to the former astate; wharfor we discussed of what effecte our protestation might be, playnly declaryng, in the delyvery of the ratification, howe we had noo commaundement to remitte the ayde, but to demaunde it, and that we had not remitted it, ne doone any thing wherby we remitted it, but styl continued in the demaunding of it, as we did also the like upon Newe Yeres daye, whenne we concluded the matier; and determyning with ourselves to be both lawe and reason, that our acte must be understood as we doo passe it, and being soo receyved of us, must have that understanding and noone other, we thought this protestation shuld suffise, nor coulde not be altered by any wordes to be spoken to the contrary in delyvery of thEmperours ratification; for wordes spoken by them, on thEmperours behaulf, maye geve an understanding to his parte for Hym, but they canne nothing altre our affirmation; for He must take from us, as we geve and delyver, if He wyl, by our acte, challenge any thing. Wherupon we concluded that, making our protestation as afore, we regarded not what he wold saye to the contrary. And as for the wordes of the contracte that saye al pretensions and differences shuld be taken awaye, the ayde, being bifore confessed both there and here, is owte of the nature of a pretense

or difference ; and soo, after the grammatical sense of the wordes, is not taken awaye, although we had been soo negligent to have forgotten the matier. But we be here three in place of trust, and of whose fayth and diligence we trust Your Majestie hath noo suspicion, who upon our dueties of allegiaunce to Your Majestie, which is the grettest worldly charge we canne have, and our truth to God, Whose Holy Name we wold not wyttingly take in vayne, we did playnly except this matier of ayde upon Newe Yeres daye, with deliberation bfore soo to doo, and advertisement to Your Highnes as it was doone. It greved us not a lytel to here it denyed, but we considred chiefly the publike affayre, and therfor upon a consultation bitwen us, as afore, we determyned to delyver Your Highnes ratification, with the forsaid protestation, and receyve thEmperours, let Skepperus saye what he wold. And therupon Skepperus and we entred the collation of the ratifications, to see whether they agreed. And, whenne we wer at the poynte to make delyvery, and Skepperus had harde our protestation that we had noo mandatum to remitte this ayde, and soo forth as bfore, which forme was more precise thenne that we had bfore spoken of, he doubted in hymself what to doo, and thenne desired us that he might consulte with Mons^r de Prate ; wherwith we wer content. And bicause Mons^r de Prate wold not advise hym to passe it soo, Skepperus desired us to be content that he might hymself goo the Courte, and speke with thEmperour if he coulde, with promyse to mete us at Bulduke the Saturdaye folowing, which is the last daye of the moneth within which the ratification shuld be delyvered. And forasmoch as being the matier, as we have wryten, delayed by suspense and expectation of sum reasonable conclusion, it shuld at that daye take an ende, we stayed our letters, to thintent Your Majestie might see the certain state of thaffayres.

This Saturdaye camme to us to this towne Mons^r Skepperus, and brought thEmperours ratification, and was content to receyve ours with our protestation, as afore ; wherunto he had thiese wordes to saye, viz. that, whenne the ayde hath been asked, thEmperours Counsayl hath always answerd "it is not due, et in eo resideo," but he hath noo commaundement but to delyver thEmperours ratification, and to take ours. We noted wel thiese wordes, for they importe not that thayde is not dewe, but that they answerd it is not due, and yet by the wordes that folowe, it shuld seme he had noo commaundement soo to saye, for he had noo commaundement but to delyver ther ratification and receyve ours. Nevertheles we replyed to hym that the first parte conteyned an untrue matier, for it had been otherwised answerd to us, but bicause it is an untruth, impertinent to the matier of our purpose, we regarde it not now ;

for, howe soever they answerd, it is neverthesse due, and not remitted by this convenaunt. And soo with our replication we made enterchaungeable delyveraunce of the ratifications, and sende nowe thEmperours to Your Majestie, by Francisco the currou Your Highnes servaunt, being the ratification by us bifore examyned. Skepperus told me, the Bishop of Winchester, aparte, that what soever thies wordes be, I shal finde the Emperour good ynowe whenne I speke; and, if we wold have left it in doubt, whether we had remitted this ayde by this pacte or noo, thEmperour had signified that He wold have thayde frendly talked on, as may appere by the capita of a letter from Grandvela to Mons^r de Prate and Skepper¹; the having wherof we

 “ pretationis articulorum nulla postea per ipsum post tot dies facta est mentio.

“ Answerd.” “ Addi huc potest quod proemium talis transactionis continet expresse hæc verba: Quod

MCCCXV. PAGET to SURREY.²

My very good Lord, with moost hartye commendations. It may like you tunderstande that I have received your letter of the 16th of this present, and communicated the same unto the Kinges Majeste. For aunswer wherunto His Highnes requyreth your Lordship to depeche from thens all such capitains with their officers, as you wrote be cassed, for His Majeste knoweth not how to employe the same. Nevertheles, if there be any capitain of the cassed, which is a speciall man of service, His Majeste woold, ere your Lordship dischargd him, be advertised of him, to thintent further ordre may be gyven for him as His Majeste shall think good. As touching the want in thOld Man shalbe supplied assoneas may be conveniently.

¹ This despatch was accompanied by two letters to Paget, one from the three Ambassadors, and the other from Gardyner alone. In the former they enter into great particularity of what passed between them and the Imperialists. In the latter Gardyner insinuates the existence of bad faith in Granvela, and Schore, and as to Skepperus says :

“ Master Secretary, I most hartely desire youe, assone as thiese letters be red to the Kinges Majeste, and, as it shal please His Highnes, to other, ordre them soo as noo man see them after. Mons^r Skepperus is to his master as he shuld be, and to us of a good syncere honeste, and the cummyng forth of this thing might hurte hym.”

² Minute, indorsed, “ To my L. of Surrey, xx^o February 1545.” It has been printed by Nott, Vol. I. p. 224., without date, but is placed after a letter from Surrey of the 15th of March, to which month Nott evidently, but erroneously, assigns it.

My Lord, the later part of your letter touching the intended enterprise of the enemye giveth me occasion to write unto you frankly my poore opinion, trusting your Lordship will take the same in no worse part, thenne I meane it. As your Lordship wisheth, so His Majeste myndeth to do somewhat for the endomaging of the enemye, and for that purpos hath appoynted to sende an armye over shortly, and that my Lord of Hertford shalbe His Highnes Lieutenaunt Generall at his being in Boullonnoys¹, whereby I feare your authorite of Lieutenaunt shall be toched, for I beleve that the later ordenyng of a Lieutenaunt taketh awaye the commission of him that was there before. Now, my Lord, bycause you have bene pleased I shuld write myn advise to your Lordship in thinges concerning your honour or benefite, I could no lesse do then put you in remembraunce, how moche in myn opinion this shall touche your honour, if you shuld passe the thing over in silence, until the very tyme of my Lord of Hertford cumming thither; for so shuld both your authorite be taken away I feare in Bullennoys, and also, if it shuld fortune you to cum abrode, be without any place of estimation in the feld, which the woorld would moch muse at, and, though ther be no suche matter, think you were rejected uppon occasion of sum eyther negligence, or experience, or such other like fault (for so many heddes, so many judgements). Wherefor, my Lord, in myn opinion you shuld do well to make sute by tymes to His Majeste to appoynt you to sum place of service in tharmey, as to the Capitainship of the forwarde or rerewarde, or to such other place of honour as shuld be mete for you; for so shal you be where knowledge and experience wilbe gotten, whereby you shuld the better be able hereafter to serve, and also have peraventure occasion to do sum notable service in revenge of your men at the last encountre with the enemies, which shuld be to your reputation in the woorld. Whereas eles, being hitherto noted, as you ar, a man of a noble courage and of a desyre to shewe the same to the face of your ennemies, if you shuld now tarye at home within a wall, havynge I doubt a pece of your authorite toched, it would be thought abrode, I feare, that either you wer desyrous to tary in a sure place of rest, oreles that the credit of your courage and forwardnes to serve wer diminished, and that you wer taken here for a man of non activite or service. Wherefor, in myn opinion, you shall do well and provide wisely for the conservation of your reputation, to sue to His Majeste for a place of service in the felde, wherein if it shall pleas youe to use me as a meane to His Majeste, I trust so to setfurth the mater to His Majeste, as He shall take the same in gracious part, and be contented tappoynt you to such a place as may best stand with your honour. And this counsaill I write unto you as one that woold you well, trusting that your Lordshipp will evenso enterprete the same, and let me know your mynd herein betymes.

Whereas your Lordship with the rest of the Counsayll there wrote¹ in the favour of Croft to be Lieutenaunt of thOld Man, it may like you tunderstande that His Highnes had before appoynced Thomas Awdeley to have the place, the same being indede a very meat man toccupye the same, as your Lordship knoweth right well, and also hath appoynted Adryan Poyninges to be Lieutenaunt to M^r Wyat in the cittadel; wherof His Majeste hath willed me to advertise your Lordship, for the same shall resort thither to their charge shortly.

Finally, I shall desyre your Lordship to sende unto me the testament of M^r Rous with his seale, his kays, and such bookes of rekeninges or accomptes as he hath there, until which tyme such as he hathe ordeyned his executours wote not how to procede in his thinges.

MCCCXVI. PAGET to MONT.²

M^r. MOWNT. I commende me hartelic unto youe. Signifying unto the same, that the Kinges Majeste, the Quenes Grace, and my Lorde Prince, with all the rest of your frendes and acquayntaunce be, thanks be to God, in good health and prosperitie, except M^r Butt, who after a longe and grevous sikenes of a dooble febre quartane, is departed in an honest and godly sorte to God, where I trust he resteth in peax.

¹ On the 10th of February.

² Minute indorsed, "To M^r Mownte from M^r Secretarie Paget xxv^o Februarij, 1545."

The Kinges Majeste hath receaved all your letters and advertisementes, moche to his contentation I assure you, and hath willed me expresly to write unto youe His Highnes thanks for the same, praying yow to contynewe your diligencie in advertisementes, and to learne if youe certainly, what hath been done nowe at this Dyett at Frankforde, and upon what forces and aydes one to an nother theye entende to woorke against their adversaries, and whether theye mynde only to defende, or eles to invade, and how theie agree amonges them selves; for we here from other places that Duke Morice is at variance with the rest, and that Marques Albert of Brandenburghe doth levie certaine horsemen to serve against the rest, bruting that theie be for the Kinges Majeste, which in dede theye be not, and so maye youe enforme the Lantgrave, or whom youe thinke eles good, and that as for horsemen out of Almayn, His Highnes hath not appointed any man to levie any, butt entendeth for a season to be served with the bandes only, which He hath entreteyned all this winter, viz. 1000 Almaynes, 1000 Italyens and Albanoyes: when the yere shall be more forward, He maye peradventure have from thens 1000 horsemen mo; whereof youe shalbe furst advertised. And as for fotemen, His Highnes hath sent Curtpening to levie 6000, who is already aboutes it, and we looke for them by thende of the next moneth at the furthest, for His Majestes army shalbe in the felde, God willing, the most parte of it by the 20th of the next moneth, at which daye there shalbe 16000 Englishmen, 2000 Italyens, 2000 Spanyardes, and the 6000 Almaynes within 10 dayes after, and horsemen 4000; and whenne the yere shalbe forward, then shall our forces be encreased. ThErle of Hertforde shalbe Lieutenaunt of tharmy, the Marques Dorsett Capten of the forward, and thErle of Surrey, who is yett Capten of Bolloyn, shall lede the riereward. This is a metely good army, our cause is good, men all favorers of Godes woorde have the leading and the doing of the warre; wherefore we trust God wooll helpe his servantes in their good quarell: how beit, His will be done in all thing, and upon the see Mouns^r Admyrall, Gods own Knight, with 16000 maryners and men of warre; for the which company there is no more prepared butt fortie shippes, the leest of 300 tonnes, and 25 others vesselles like galleis to row, saving that where the galley shotteth butt from the prore, these shall shote from all sides like another ship, and from the prore also. The last yere His Majeste hadd butt 4 of them, and yett didd theie bett at a fight 8 of the Frenche galleis, which I saw with myn eyes at Portesmouth, and the reason is apparent.

Youe must also enquire, nowe that the Palsgrave is cum in to the league, how that mattier doth betwene him and the King of Denmarke, and whether the

the Bishop of Mens be cum into the league or no. One thinge there is, which moche offendeth the Kinges Majeste, that, seing the Frenche King is in league with the Bisshop of Roome, thapparant ennemye of those Princes, and Who hath in no owne pointe joyned Him self with the Protestantes, nor wooll not, yet theye there esteeme his frendeship so moche as theye do; suffring men of his to be so famylyer with them, so moche made of, and to levie men in their countries against His Majeste, and thus to putt Him and the Kinges Majeste in one degre of amytie with them, whenne that His Majeste is in the same predicament with them tooching the Supremacye of the Pope and the Generall Counsaill, and for a further communication of amitie with them, hath done asmoche as He maye do with his honour. For youe knowe that the Quenes Secretary and youe were sent thither for that purpose; and how long youe laye there, and coule have no answeere butt a slevlees answeere; and yett, when His Majeste called home M^r Bucler, He didd nott utterly renounce the former practize, butt, as He sent to them furst, so He looketh theye shulde sende to Him next, if theie mynde any thing with His Majeste, and reason. And as tooching the manteynaunce of His Majestes ennemies so moche as theye do, lett them looke well to the matter; for the weker theye suffre His Majeste to be made, theye shall fynde at lenthe their parte therein; and so tell them hardely; for their parte is more therein then theie knowe of, butt fewe woordes sufficeth a wise man; for, whenne so ever it pleaseth there ennemies, theye have in their handes wherewith to bring their ancient frende (as theie call Him), the Frenche King, in their necke, with his drawen sworde in his hande, to overthrow those heretikes, as the French King calleth them, amonges his Counsaill. Well, well; I saie no more; yow maie hereof talke more at large with Seignor Brewno, to whom I have written a letter at this presente, which se delivered, I praye youe, and also helpe that the Kinges gounes, stayed by the Landsgrave, maie be released. The gentle satisfaction of the Kinges Majeste by sum frendly doinges of the Lansgrave and others there might do wonders well. As tooching the Dyett at Woormes, if it contynew, His Majeste, if any thing occurre in the meane tyme, maye advertise youe peradventure of his pleasour therein. I praie yow communicate these letters to Brewno, and commende me to John Sturmius and Sleidanus, desyring Sleidanus to holde me excused for my grete busynes, that I write not to him at this present. Thus, &c. 25^o February.

HUMANISSIME Domine Brewno, Salutem. Cum neque Latine satis bene scribam, Gallice autem pessime, ex duobus malis minus malum eligendum putavi. Qua in re si quid peccatum erit, hoc tu attribues benevolentie erga te meæ, qua provocatus sum gratulari tibi his literis incolumem tuum in Germania reditum, atque significare me accepisse literas abs te, Domino Montio nostro ad me datas ex Francfordia ² die presentis mensis, pro quibus ago tibi magnam gratiam, nam ex illis intellexi, quid animi vestrates habeant erga Serenissimum Regem Dominum meum, et quid ab illis Sua Majestas sperare possit, nempe eadem benevolentiae argumenta, que Gallorum Regi sunt polliciti. Cum tamen longe majori et arctiori vinculo Sua Majestas illis conjuncta sit, et causam magis communem cum illis habeat quam Rex Gallorum; Serenissimus Rex meus habet capitalem illorum hostem (nempe Episcopum Romanum) pro communi hoste, Rex Gallorum est in fœdere cum isto Episcopo, et arctissima amicitia Illi conjunctus, apud Quem alit Oratorem, quocum habet secretissimas practicas etiam in perniciem vestram. Rex meus non admittit istud Concilium Tridentinum, sed condemnat pro iniquo Conciliabulo Papistico. Rex Gallie mittit illuc suos Procuratores et Episcopos, atque eo facto approbat auctoritatem Papisticam, et omnes vestrates, qui illam auctoritatem non agnoscitis, pro hereticis condemnat, et tamen vos equa lance amicitiam Serenissimi Regis mei, et Gallorum trutinatis, neque videre vultis ex nostra diminutione causam vestram fieri deteriorem. Habet Papa suos exploratores apud Lantgravium valde familiares, per quos omnia intelligit, et omnes conatus vestri vestris adversarijs patefunt. Si roges quos exploratores dico, Rickrode et Basfonteyn, nam quicquid illi vident aut sciunt, (et quid non sciunt? et quid non vident?) de eo Rex illorum certior factus, aut Pontificis apud ipsum Oratori, aut apud Pontificem Oratori suo curat, si in rem suam faciat, exponendum. Ergo favete quantum libet istis exploratoribus, amplectamini ipsos, permittite Regi Gallie, quia dare vobis verba potest, quot vult milites in nostrum detrimentum, id est in vestrum proprium; et Regem meum contemnite, quia vos amat, et vobis bene cupit, sed quam multis Deus det meliora. MCCCXXII. GARDYNER, &c. to KING HENRY VIII.¹

PLEASYTH it Your most Excellent Majestie to understande, that upon receipte of letters wryten to us from Your Highnes servauntes John Brende and John Brygynden, signifying ther repare to Captayne Courtepenyng for mustryng of certain fotemen to serve Your Highnes, with request to advertise them, whither we coulde obteyne passage for them by smal numbres through thiese Lowe Countreys, or noo; forasmoch as Grandvela had answerd, thEmperours pleasour was the Quene shuld be spoken with therin, as in our former letters we signified to Your Highnes, we thought good amongste us that I, Sir Edwarde Carne, shuld desire President Skore to obteyne answer of the Quene [therein]; which I did, with an other request also for ly[cence o]f certayn munition, provyded for Your Highnes by Damesyl, to passe in to England,

accordyng to such a memoryal as he sent in that bihault. President Skore shewed hymself very wylling to move the Quene in thiese matiers; and whenne we loked for aunswer, Mons^r de Grandvela sent thEmperours Chief Secretary to me, the Byshop of Wynchester, with request that we might speke together where I wold appoynte, at his howse or myne; wherupon we went to hym upon Saincte Mathews¹ daye in the mornyng, and found with hym President Skore. At our cummyng he did al he might, with divises of pleasaunte tales, to entre and renewe familiarite; and for entre to his purpose protested thEmpereurs earnest affection to Your Majestie, and his owne zele to further the same; therwith he told us of the diet at Cambraye, and howe splendre intelligence is bytween thEmperour and the French King; and thenne cam in a rumour spred by the French men in Italye, how they have practise for peace with Your Highnes in such forwardnes as they be nere a poynte; and soo cam [at last] to his purpose, that thEmperour wold not fayle Your Highnes in any thing that is promysed. And as for the passage of thiese fotemen, thEmperour is contented, he said, they shuld passe in smal numbres, soo as Captain Courtepenyng cum fyrst to the Quene, hymself, to divise of the maner of the passyng of them. For, Grandvela sayde, that albeit the souldgeors be appointed to goo severally, yet without ordre taken they may arryve moo together at oone towne, by loytryng of sum and spede of other, thenne might be wel ruled, and with Courtepenyng they wold divise therfor. We said his cummyng might make a delaye gretter thenne wer expedient to Your Highnes affayres. President Skore said he shuld with al spede be expedite upon his cummyng. And, where we doubted of the securite of his persone, therin they assured, on thEmperours bihault, that he shuld cumme and departe in saufte at his pleasour: and here Mons^r Grandvela began to prayse the man for his courage in the warre. This answer we have signified to Your Highnes said servauntes, and sent our letters by a special and sure man, oone that knowith the langage and countrie, and is Your Highnes servaunt, called Bastian of Andwerp.

As touching the licence, it was thought a gret proportion, that was required: and, with a protestation that thEmperour wold Your Highnes had al that may be spared, they said they must nedes forsee ther owne furniter, but al that might be conveniently forborne, Your Highnes shuld have, and they wold make expedition that daye, as they did in dede, and graunted al, saving oone thousaunde hacbuttes and 500 harnesse for fotemen lesse thenne was demanded.

¹ This is a manifest mistake for St. Matthias, viz. the 24th of February.

After thies matiers passed, Mons^r Grandvela sayde he must that afternone make instructions for the depech of Mons^r Skepperus to Your Highnes, and wold therin have thadvise of me, the Bishop of Winchester, what matiers he shuld speke of to Your Highnes; and this was spoken soo famyliarly, as though they wold folowe my counsayl in al thinges. I answerd hym that he had told us thEmperour wold send hym with commission for the matier of maryage, and soo passed that over. And, whenne afterwarde speking of thEmperours departyng, appoynted the first daye of this monyth from this towne, I, the Bishop of Winchester, feared that bfore that daye I shuld not receyve letters from Your Highnes, soo as I might take my leave of thEmperour here. To this Grandvela sayde earnestly, that if I wold, thEmperour shuld tarye here two dayes the lenger. Thiese be ever smal matiers to be wryten to Your Highnes, but oonly bycause they declare a desire in thiese men to redubbe that was past, and, as they might, to reconcile us again. We had noo communication of the matier of thayde, and for al his chere he might see we wer not satisfied.

The 27th daye Francisco arryved with letters from Your Highnes Counsayl, signifying Your Majesties pleasour for the retourne of me, the Bishop of Wynchester, to your gracious presence; for the which I most humbly thanke Your Majestie.

The 28th daye we had accesse to thEmperour, and, after Your Highnes most affectuous recommendations, declared unto Hym Your Majesties pleasour concernyng the retourne of me, the Bishop of Wynchester, the continuance here of me, the Bishop of Westmester, and thattendaunce of me, Sir Edwarde Carne, with the Quene. And thenne I, the Bishop of Winchestre, told thEmperour, that being nowe thamitie renewed bytween Your Majestic and Hym, and al scrupules removed, wherin I moch rejoysed, there rested oonly thayde due for the last yere, wherin I required Hym instantly to take such ordre, as I might retourne with a ful perfection of al matiers. It was due, I said, and He promysed it. "Ye," quod He, "with a condition." I told Hym I never harde of any condition, but such as is fulfilled by this eclaryshement. Thenne thEmperour said He toke it that by this eclaryshement al had been goone. Wherunto I said, we wer thre of sum honestie and conscience, and we affirmed unto Hym that we dyd ever demaunde thayde, and reserved it not to be taken awaye by this eclaryshement. And thenne I told Hym this is noone article of estate, it is but a money matier, and being, as He is, in the highest place of honnour, and having wisdom proporcionably therunto, soo He shuld facion this matier accordyngly. ThEmperour said He wold speke with his Counsayl in it, and wyl them to consider it. I prayed Hym He wold soo doo, and at his departure out of thiese parties recomende the observation of thiese newe capitulations to the Quene, who I thought of her owne inclination wyl gladly doo al thing. And Your Highnes, upon consideration therof, hath wryten to Her for obteyning particuler thinges nowe nedeful, wherwith I wyl not encombre Hym, but oonly desire the general recommendation as afore, and that He wyl remembre and consider thastate of Your Highnes affayres, and howe beneficial Your Highnes warre is to Hym, Who travaylith the French King to bring thEmperours pourpose to passe; and told Hym, if He have any good bargayn or reason at the French Kinges hand, He maye thanke Your Highnes of it. And therfor, as thEmperour wold favour his owne enterprise, He must favour Your Highnes warre, and ayde with every necessary, soo as Your Highnes, for discourage, shuld not leave. ThEmperour harde it very wel and pleasauntly, and said al that was promysed shuld be observed gladly. ThEmperour gave me a fewe good wordes for myself, and, with his cap in his hand, desired me to make his most affectuous commendations to Your Highnes; and therwith did my duetie to Hym, and departed.

The first daye of March we spake with Grandvela, who divised to enterteigne us of the most gentyl and familier facion that might be. And as for the matier of thayde, is referred to be answerd by Mons^r Skepperus there, in such sorte as they trust he shal satisfie Your Highnes. It was confessed both by Grandvela and Skore, that Your Majesties ayde to thEmperour, whenne Master Wallop went, was a goodly ayde; and came mervelously in tyme; and Grandvela added, howe Your Highnes, at thEmperours request, continued thayde six wekes above the tyme of the liege. We badde them thenne consider it, and whiles we stande them in such stede, make [use] of us; "and, seing the frute of our warre is like to be yours more thenne ours, " handle us thereafter;" for, albeit Your Majestie shal have a glorie to be the shourge of Fraunce, and doo a benefite to Christendom to punishe Hym that hath troubled al Christendom, yet it is evident thenne, whenne Fraunce is by Your Highnes thus travayled, thEmperour therby have opportunitie to recover his owne, and restore the Duke of Savoye, as He desireth. "Ye, mary," quod Grandvela, "and soo ye told thEmperour." We said we told it them again, and yet wold have them, as they be wise men, remembre opportunitie, which many tymes passith. They shuld therfor consider, by howe many occasions the warre bytween Your Highnes and the French King might cesse and make an ende, in which cace the French Kyng wold be more untoward to reason thenne He is nowe. And al wise men thinke that a visage of warre on thEmperours parte to the French King nowe, wold induce Him to doo reason to both, and sodenly make quyet in Christendom. Grandvela semed earnestly to assent that it is trewe, and yet by reason of such rumours as have been spred bytween thEmperour and the Germainys, thEmperour cannot resolve upon any warre, tyl He hath spoken with the Prynces of Germany at the Dyet; and there, Grandvela said, he wold communicate with me, the Bishop of Westminster, the state of thinges, throughly to advertise Your Majestic herin. We had many wordes to the forsayde purpose. And, by the waye, Grandvela solemly sware that with the Frenchmen there is noo further agreement in practise, ne like to be, but the matier clerely desperate, that the French King shuld restore the Duke of Savoye without force and compulsion. And it is not unlike that, bicause the Duke of Savoye is a Prince of thEmpire, thEmperour wyl, and He canne, have the warre accepted as warre of the Emyre, in which cace the French King shalbe destitute of the service of the Germaines, in whom it is treason to fight against the quarel of thEmpyre. This is but a conjecture, but Grandvela soo speketh of the resolution to be taken at the Dyet, what shalbe doone, as though he wold we shuld thinke there wer sumwhat to be doone. We had not yet spoken with the Quene, and therfor comened with them oonly generally to have al thinges requisite, victualles, and other thinges, ever remembryng them that Your Highnes disapoyntement is ther owne disapoyntement in thende. They yelded to it, and said we shuld have al thinges; and soo, with good wordes bytweyn us, departed.

That day at afternone we spake with the Quene, and delyvered Your Majesties letters, which She receyved very pleasauntly. We told Her Your Highnes wold take thankfully at her hand such thinges, as thEmperour hath renued by convenaunt, that Your Highnes shuld have; and therfor we have oonly spoken generally to thEmperour, and reserved the specialtes to be opened unto Her, which for her wisdom we doubted not but She wold consider, and the present necessite Your Highnes hath of the same, and in what affayre. She answerd very gentyll that, if thEmperour wer absent, She coulde of Herself make answer, but in his presence She must nedes counsail with Hym, and soo She wold, and therupon make answer. Your Highnes, She said, might be assured, that al She might doo, She wold doo gladly, but She must folowe thordre of her Souverain thEmperour. ThEmperour, She said, had a leage with Fraunce also, which She may not breake. Herupon we opened the matier at lenght unto Her, and made Her understande it. She hard diligently, and said Your Highnes might be assured, there shuld be noo faulte of her part in any thing; and soo we toke our leave of Her; and haven wryten, hitherto loking for an answer, being this Tuesday the removing daye.

We spake with thEmperour concernyng Ryffenberge, wherin thEmperour

promysed to commande the Vicechaunceler Navius to make reaporte unto Hym of the hol matier, which thEmperour hath also commaunded, but the Vicechaunceler sayth he must have a good tyme, or he canne doo it. We desired thEmperour it might be examyned and discussed in thiese parties. ThEmperour said He wold be enformed by the Vicechaunceler, and soo take ordre.

Here hath ben with me, the Bishop of Winchestre, thAmbassadour of the Marques of Brandenborowe, not the Electour, but Albert, who hath been with Your Highnes. [He hath adver]tysyd me, his master hath in his retinue two thousand horsemen redy to serve, and, if Your Majestie wyl use his service, he shalbe able upon advertisement to bringe them soo far as this towne within a moneth, and soo further after the rate of journeys as Your Majeste shal commaunde. And as for convenaunt, he wyl aunswer noo other but as thEmperour hath used. I thanked hym for his off[er and that, by my Lord of Westmestre here resident, he shuld understand whether Your Highnes hath nede or noo. He said in thende that of his master, against al men save thEmperour, Your Highnes shuld be assured of loyal service and good men wel in ordre.

We have taryed here thaunswer from President Skore, who promysed to signifie it to me, the Bishop of Winchester, bfore my departure, and bicause it is soo late as we be enforced to leave this towne, we finishe these letters together with , and shal send thans[wer to be wryten by me, the Bishop of [Winch]ester, and Sir Edward Carne. And pray Almyghty God for the preservation of your most noble and Royal Person. At Mastryke, the secounde of February.¹

¹ The whole of the facts stated in this letter, and several of the dates, particularly St. Matthias' Day (p. 67.), the 1st of March (p. 69.), and Tuesday (p. 70.), show that the true date of this despatch was the 2d of March, and not of February.

MCCCXXIII. GARDYNER and CARNE to PAGET.

MASTER Secretary. After our most harty commendations. In our commen letters to the Kinges Majeste, we wryte that we wold in a post scripta signifie the Quenes answer, which we trusted to have had by President Skore; for required specially by me, Sir Edwarde Carne, to sollicite it, he graunted he wold, and said "thenne there must be sum meane used in thiese matiers for " avoyding inconveniences;" and that makith us thinke that they wyl devise to doo indirectly that they dare not openly professe, like as in the licence last graunted for passing of munition, there was a letter directed to the Margrave of Antwerpe to speke to the custumers to suffre such and such thinges to passe, as wer by us required. We maye conjecture that they wold not over openly shewe themselves against the French men; this we gesse in the meane tyme, whiles we knowe the answer. This daye thEmperour and the Quene departed both from Mastryke, thEmperour towardses Almayne and the Quene towardses Brucelles; at which departing there wer many matiers to be resolved; but President Skore, that had promised us thaunswer, was bydden to a banket amonges good felaws, to make this countre chere in a hote stufe with plentye of cold wyne. I, the Bishop of Winchester, sent two of my servauntes to seke hym, after we hard thEmperour and Quene and Grandvela wer goone, and it was two howres, or we coulde here eyther of our men or Skore; wherupon, being thenne almost thre of the klok, we finished our other letters; and, as we wer going to our horse, cummyth Twaytes my man, and tellith tydinges of President Skore that he founde hym in a stufe, drinking roundely, and oone of the company with a furred cap and a glasse in his hande of a quarte ful of wyne; and whenne Twaytes had doone his message, President Skore desired me, Sir Edward Carne, to mete hym at Brucelles, and there he wold shewe me the Quenes pleasour and answer, to whom thEmperour had remitted the matier; and when Twaytes had departed from hym, Wyngfeld, who was also sent, founde hym, and he did the like message; to whom he answerd that he had sent me such answer as we wold like wel ynowe: both my men said it was far forth dayes with hym. And soo we toke our journey, and departed from my Lord of Westmester, whom God prosper in his journey. And from hens, I, Sir Edward, goo to Brucelles to mete with President Score, and I, the Bishop of Winchester, to Antwerpe, whither I, Sir Edwarde Carne, wyl with sped repace with President Skores answer; and for the

the more spede tel President Skore, that I, the Bishop of Winchester, wyl tary at Antwerpe to knowe that answer.

We praye youe signifie the summe of this matier to the Kinges Highnes, being the circumstaunce, as we write it, more light matier thenne wherwith we wyl encombre the Kinges Majesties eares. And thus thinking good to depech this post with the rest, bicause it conteynith better matier thenne we wrote last, we shal sende the answer assone as we have it, which cannot be long. In the meane tyme we byd most hartely fare wel. At Hassel, the seconde of Marche.

Skepperus hath his depech from thEmperour to repare to the Kinges Majestie, and is in Sealand to abyde the sending of it unto Hym; this Grandvela signified unto us.

Your assured loving frendes,

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime, decima septima præteriti mensis ad Majestatem Vestram litteras per postam Francfordia misi, quas commode perlatas esse spero.

Modo ad Majestatem Vestram mitto litteras Philippi Comitis Palatini ejus adventum prænuncciantes.

Gallicus ille Capitaneus Reckroed, una cum Basfonteyn, adhuc Francfordiæ commoratur, ac optimos quosque et milites et militum Præfectos conducit. Ipse Reckroed munus habet duodecim peditum signa adducendi; audio quoque ab oculatis authoribus magnam pecuniæ vim eum hic penes se habere: milites, quos Gallo conducit, ex præscripto sacramento jurant se contra quoscunque terra et mari præter Imperium et Protestantes pugnatuduodenis peditum signis ducem designatum esse. Galliae Rex crebris modo legationibus Principes Protestantes captat et ambit. Hesterno die Philippus Palatinus, sub fido silentio, mihi significavit suum patrum Fredericum graviter ferre nullum congratulatorem ad se hactenus a Serenissimo Angliæ Rege missum esse, propter Electoratus accessionem, quandoquidem omnes alij et Reges et Principes hunc ei honorem congratulati sint. Omnes Comites Evangelio addicti modo Conventus agunt; et audio eos rogatu et monitu Episcopi Coloniensis convenisse, quem Cæsar nisi intra dies quindecim omnia in religione reformata et correcta casset, ac juxta vetustos abusos restituat, omnibus regalibus dignitatibus, libertatibus, immunitatibus, feudis, et beneficijs quibuscunque privare et expoliari judicialiter decreverit, subditosque omnes et adhærentes banno Imperiali obnoxios facturum sit. Hic processus inauditus et ex summo jure habitus, omnibus offendiculo et admirationi est; et fieri posset ut ex hujus processus executione horribile per totam Germaniam bellum exardescat. Ipse enim Episcopus nullis unquam temporibus hoc faciet. Protestantes quoque omnes confirmatis et obstinatis animis sunt in Coloniensis defensionem. Colloquium Ratisbonense ita procedit, ut omnes sentiant serio ibi agi nihil. Cesar eo tres Monachos Collocutores¹ misit, juratos Evangelij hostes, et Hispanum Theologum Malvendam, quibus disputandi formam juxta Lovaniensium articulorum dogma præscripsit. Hactenus magna contentio fuit de disputandi forma, Protestantibus volentibus ut omnia utriusque partis dicta a publicis notarijs exciperentur, alteris hoc repudiantibus; verum tandem obtinuit sub notariorum annotatione omnia fieri ac asservari deberi apud Senatum Ratisbonensem. De Concilio Tridentino nihil modo ad nos allatum est. Ego Regiæ Vestræ Majestati sub debita fide et observantia me supplicem addico. Datum Wormatiæ, tertia Martij, anno 1546.²

MCCCXXV. GARDYNER and CARNE to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASITH Your most excellent Majestie to understand that I, Sir Edwarde Carne, arryved this night at Antwerpe, with answer from the Quene¹, aswel concernyng the lettres delyvered by me the Bishop of Winchester, as also to the matier of such lettres as I, Sir Edward Carne, receyved from your Majesties Counsayl of the 22^{ti} of February for the letting of the passyng of the Frenche men throwe thEmperours grounde, wherby to annoy Your Majesties Est Pale.

Fyrst, as concernyng money; after many difficulties for feare of the skarsenes therof, yet for knowlege that they be bounde to furnishe your Highnes in al they maye, they have graunted therein for the summe of 200000 crownes, soo it be not of the special stampe of this countrie, which Master Vaughan liketh wel, and sayth with that licence he doubteth not to conveye, if nede be, 500000.

As touching victualles, they allege a mervelous skarsete, which the prices declare to be trewe, for they be far derer here, thenne in England; and therein they divide the matier thus: as for wheate and corne, so moche as camme to the townes out of Estland, Your Highnes factours shal have licence to bye it, and cary it awaye, and therein they wyl helpe what they maye; but they cannot spare the corne of the innelonde growthe to be caryed out, for feare of a famyne in thiese partyes: and as for other victualles, they dare not geve a general libertie, for feare men wold for money abuse it; but thus the Quene and the Counsayl sayth, that upone a proportion made by Your Highnes purveyours, howmoche and of what kindes they wold have, there shalbe as moche graunted as may be spared; and speking of chese, they thought Your Highnes might have therof good plentye in Holland.

As for caryages, if it be signified from Your Highnes Commissioners, what numbre they wold have, there shalbe, upon the knowlege therof, allotted such a nombre as maye be conveniently spared, in whiche cace they moche desire that sum ordre maye be taken for the good entretement of the subgettes, that they may have the more courage to serve.

And as concernyng thentre of the Frenche men, they wyl doo al maye be doone to let them; and first thy wyl wryte to Mons^r de Rieulx to doo what he maye, and they wyl incontinently depeche to thEmperour and require Hym to send to the Frenche King to admonishe Hym to be ware of any suche enterprise, and tel Hym the daungier of it, by reason of the liege bytween your Highnes and thEmperour, whiche thEmperour reserved in his treatie with Fraunce, and wyl kepe it.

Thusmoch they saye shalbe doone, and as moch as they maye besydes, for thaccomplyshement of that thEmperour hath promysed; and thus trust Your Majestie wyl consider that they cannot be able in dede to resiste the Frenche menn, soo sodenly passing the plat countrie, but al the socour that canne be, shalbe taken from them, and al meanes used that they maye to let them.

Master Vaughan is determyned to send a good summe of money by me, the Bishop of Winchestre, to Calays; and therfor I tary here tomorowe al daye, and trust after that shortly to see Your Majestie, for whose preservacion we shal accordyng to our most bounden deuties contynual praye to Almighty God. ¹ Letters from John Brende and John Brigandyn to Henry VIII. and to the Council, dated from Bremen on the 4th of March, on this subject, are extant: and at the end of these letters they add, "A fewe daies now past died Martyne Luther, whiche thing thoughte it be not of muche moment, yet by reason of the great fame that goeth of it in this countrey, we could do no lesse then advertise."

speke with the Ladie Regent here, or the lycence shuld be gevyn for the passage of the souldiours throw this cuntre, which he bringythe to serve Your Majestie about Calays, upon whose arryvall hether order shuld be gevyn to hym for their passage; wherof the said Commissaries being advertesed by my Lordes of Wynchester and Westmester, hath now sende hether to me that the said Courtpening can in no wyse cum hether, for that the mustres be appoynted at Nauhowse the 17th of this present, whose presens cowde not be spared therhens, and for that they have in charge the said souldiours to be at Calays by the laste of this present, therfor willede me so to provyd here that in no wyse the sayd souldiours (passing in smalle routtes) be not stopped by the wey. Immediatly upon the recept therof I resorted to the President Score, who upon long conference had about the said Courtpeninges commyng, and the said passage, said he wold send to the Ladie Regent to know hyre pleasure therein, Who was then in the foreste hunting, in hyre jorney towardes Bynkes, wher She entendith to tary a great parte of this Lent (as hit ys sayd). The 15th of this the President cam to me to my lodging, saing that the Ladie Regentes pleasure was he shuld come to me with hyre aunser toching the passage of the said souldiours, which ys, that forasmoche as thEmperors Majestie had made a resolute aunser at Mastryke, that before any lycence for the sayd passage shuld be grauntid, He wold Courtpenning shuld cum and speke with Hyre, from the which resolution She wold in no wyse goo, and therfor willyd me in any wyse to advertyse Your Majesties said Commissaries that, yf they shuld goo about to passe before the said Courtpenning speke with Hyre, they wolbe stopped and stayd, wherby the said Commissaries in so sending of them shuld doo yll servyce to Your Majestie, as he said; so that any order what so ever shuld be gevyn to the souldiours for to passe in smalle companyes quietlye, and to pay for all that they toke by the wey, yet in no wyse wolle She agre that they passe, tyll She have spokyn with Courtpenning; which myght be here, after the mustres takyn, within 3 dayes from Nauhowse, which the President said they knew well ynoghe, and then upon his being here the President said ther shuld be no difficultye for the passage. How be hit, he wold not I shuld take that for any lycence, or as spokyn by hym. Wherupon I dyspached Bestian, Your Majesties servant, to your said Commissaries with the said aunser. Sir, ther is somme other cause why they wolde speke with hym, then for the said passage; for, seing that they wold not be contented with any order that shuld be takyn, or by the said Capitayn, or by your said Commissaries, for the quiet passage of the said souldiours, I preyde them to appoynt what order they thoght meyt for the quiet passage of them, and I wold sende hit to Your Majesties said Commissaries, missaries, lest by Courtpenninges comming hether the journey might be retardate: but they wold none other, but wold nedes spek with Courtpening. I thought good to advertyse Your Majestie herof.

I movide also for lycence to transport certen wheat for Your Majesties provision, which John Dymoke hath providede, wherein hetherto hath byn great stay. I have byn divers tymes with the Counsayll here about hit, who wold have me send for the said John Dymoke, that they may appoynt an order, for as moche as the Ladie Regent wold graunt, how hit may passe without any pasport, for She wolbe seen to graunt no pasport for any victualls, for the scarcyte that ys here, which apperythe undowtyd to be so by the great derthe therof.

Other occurantes here be none, but that Doctor Adryan van Burgh, oon of the Counsaill of Malynges, is dyspached thetherwardes to joyne with thEmperours Ambassador ther, toching the marchantes causes, who entendyth to departe tomoro or within this 2 daies, as the President shewde me. The Ladie Regent entendyth shortlye to visite all the frontiers towards France, and all the bands of horsmen in that quartiers be commaundyd to be in a redines, for She wold tak the mustres of them all shortly, as hit is said for truyth. Other occurantes here be none. And this I beseche Almyghtie God to conserve Your moost excellent Majestie in your moost royall state with long lyff. From Bruxelles, the 17th of Marche.

MCCCXXVIII. CARNE to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASYTHE Your mooste excellent Majestie. This day being with the Ladie Regent for licence to transporte certen wheat from Dordryght that John Dymoke had bought for Your Majesties provision, She, in the presens of the Duke of Arscot and President Score, after they had long consulted together, and long debating with me in the presens of John Dymoke, rested in this aunswer,

answer, that She wold gladly doo what myght lye in Hyre to Your Majesties satisfaction, sayng hyre dutye to thEmperor, Who had gevyn charge to Hyre befor his departure herchens, that She shuld in no wyse licence any corne to be transported or goo out of this cuntre, which myght releve the cuntre here, and can be uttryde in no place but here, as all the corne that commyth to Utright, thoughe comme from Cleves or Gulyke, who can have no uttrance, for lacke of ryvers, but oonly in this cuntres; whose commandment She can in no wyse transgresse; but asfor Eastelonde wheat, She is content Your Majestie to have a hundryd lastes of that that maye be recoveryde now out of hande, and what so ever quantyte be provided in the Eastelonde for Your Majestie, yf hit arryve in to thEmperors dominions here, ther shalbe no lett for licence of the passage therof. She grauntyd also chese and butter, suche as M^r Dymoke suyde fore. And, Sir, having recevyde a letter from M^r Vaughan, requiring me to be in hand with Hyre toching dyvers persons haunting Andwarp under color of marchaundyse, ther practysing for the Frenshe Kinge ageynst Your Majestie, which myght comme to the knowlege of the Margrave ther by reason of his office, and therin to preye Hyre to write hyre favorable letters to the said Margrave, to serche for suche, and having knowlege of any to advertyse me or M^r Vaughan, Your Majesties Agent ther, wherby Your Majestie myght be advertysed therof; which I dyde accordingly: wherin She said that She had takyn oon of late in Utryght, that practysed for the Frenshe King both ageynst Your Majestie and thEmperour also, who confessyd that the Frenshe King had intelligence with all the Almayns that Your Majestie had reteyned heretofore, ye, those that were in Your Majesties service ther, in so moche that, yf hit had come to the batayll or to any joyning with thennymyse, they wold a turned ageynst Your Majestie with thennymyse: and farther confessed, that the Frenshe King hath sende to Scotlonde, that they ther shuld practyse a peace with Your Majestie, and shuld not stay to promesse the young Quene ther in mariage for my Lorde Prince is Grace, but in no wyse deliver Hyre to Your Majestie out of the cuntre, but ells not to styke to promesse, what Your Majestie wolde, so that Your Majestie wold render Bolong to the Frenshe King; for what so ever promesse the Scottes made, She being an infant, She myght goo from hit when She commythe to age. This She shewyd me prevyly, and also said She wold writ to the said Margrave to serche what he cowde of suche practisers, and to advertyse accordingly, wherby Your Majestie may have true knowlege therof. This I thought good to advertyse Your Majestie of, moost humbly beseching the same, of your mooste benyng accustomed clemencie, to accept this my doinges in good and

M^R KERNE. In my most harty maner I commend me unto you. Advertising the same that, uppon occasion of your letters conteynynge the refusal of the Regent for Curtpenynges bandes passage, onles he cum thither hymself to speke with the Quene, and also of theyr difficultye for the licence of the corne, that Dymmok hath bought; the Kinges Majeste appoynted us of Wynchestre, the Master of the Horse, and Sir W. Paget to speke with Mons^r Skipper and the Ambassadour Resident; of whom, for Curtpenyng, we have such answer as by my letters to the Comissioners you may perceyve, which when you have sene, you must delyver to Fraunces, and after knowledge had there, wheder they will have any thing done in that behaulf, depeche Fraunces away with hast to the sayd Comissaryes. This letter to the Quene you must delyver, which concerneth aswell the lycence for the whete as for the men, and therfor you must procure answer therin toching the whete, and advertyse Dymmok therof with diligence. We have promised to gyve agayn so moche whete, as we now take, and also promised to recompence the hurtes that shalbe duely proved to be done by Curtpenyng. Thus requyryng your answer at the Quenes hand to be sent hither with diligence, I byd you wel to fare, the 26th of Marche, 1546.

UNDECIMA hujus mensis sub noctem huc advenit Heraldus Regius Rugedragon, perferens ad me tuas literas, ornatissime Domine Pagethe, pro quibus amantissime et copiose ad me scriptis summas tibi ago gratias, nihil enim mihi gratius contingere potest, quam subinde a vobis certior fieri, voluntatemque vestram intelligere; et quandoquidem in ijs literis mihi significasti ut missum adjuvare vellem pro tormentis Regijs apud *Lantgravium*² detentis recuperandis, prius literis tuis ad Doctorem Brunonem Argentinam per conductum nuncium missis una cum dicto Heraldus ad Lantgravium in Hassiam profectus sum, qui ubi ex literis Regijs intellexisset, detentos archibus ad Serenissimum Regem pertinere, extemplo se eos dimissurum respondit, simulque proprio ac peculiari nuncio ad Ducem Wirtenbergensem scripsit, ut quoque tormenta detenta relaxare vellet, copiamque litterarum regiarum ad eundem Ducem misit, non dubitans quin Wirtenbergensis tormenta a se detenta remissurus quoque sit, perinde ut hæc omnia ex literis Lantgravii ad Serenissimum Regem scriptis intelligetis. Deinde fusissime et copiosissime super omnibus ijs que Magnificentia tua ad me scripsit cum eodem Lantgravio locutus sum, commemorans et inculcans quantopere ea amicitia, quam hij Status cum Galliae Rege, Gallicisque Oratoribus haberent, eaque patientia quod Recrodum, Basfonteyn, et alios, ut Vogelspergium, Hans a Saltzburg in eorum ditionibus non solum commorari et omnia resciscere, sed et militum delectus contra Serenissimum Anglie Regem facere permetterent, tandem in eorum ipsorum perniciem et exitium efficacissime operatura sit; fieri enim non aliter posse, quin Angliæ Rege affecto hij Status pessime habituri sint, ipsumque Gallum qui non tam in religione ab ijs dissentiat, sed et ipsorum religionem confessionem dogmata reprobet, proscribat, et persequatur, nullo unquam tempore ijs ex animo amicum et benevolum futurum; fieri enim non posse, ut ibi ulla amicitia constet, ubi tanta fidei, religionis, et Divini cultus dissimilitudo sit. Hijs et istiusmodi plerisque patienter auditis, respondit hæc omnia forsan vera esse, verum neminem qui sapiat sibi alijsque suis confœderatis consulturum, ut Gallum offendant eumque contra se provocent, antequam certiores facti sint, quid sibi de Anglie Rege polliceri possint. Ante hæc enim sepius conjunc-tionem et societatem ab eo expetitam esse, verum nunquam impetratam, tum eundem quoque Regem a Protestantium confessione dissentire. Respondi non omnia omnium moribus convenire, nec uno momento omnia constitui posse, ipsum tamen Anglie Regem per Dei gratiam in precipuis articulis cum hijs Statibus consentire, ut quod ad superioritatem Romani Episcopi Concilium ab Ipso indictum, et superstitiose per usurpatam authoritatem ab eo statuta et statuenda attineat, tum in plerisque alijs, ut in veneratione sanctorum, peregrinationibus, reliquiarum et monachorum abolitionibus. Respondit vera hæc esse, et tamen Regem nuper detrectasse etiam pro eorum articulorum defensione fædus inire, quia Cæsar novato et speciosiore federe eum ad Se reduxerit. Quod si Serenissimus Rex in Germania alicubi locorum in prompta pecunia deponat, centum milia aureorum (coronatorum, inquam, corrigendo dixit), quibus uti possimus si religionis ergo invadamur, adeo ut de ejus animo et ope hanc presentem arram habeamus, tum Ejus amicitiam Gallica longe preferemus, ea precipue causa quia in religione multo nobis conjunctior est quam Gallus; nec ullam spem de Gallia concipere possumus, hoc Rege vivo; que nostra opinio ex nupero ejus ad nos remisso responso confirmata est. Scripsimus enim ex Conventu Francfordiano litteras supplices ad Gallie Regem pro Christianis ibi persecutionem patientibus; ad quas litteras nobis Gallus respondit, Se ab majoribus suis accepta in religione permansurum, amicitiam autem cum hijs Statibus in alijs terminis consistere. Ad hæc ego: quod si dictam summam deponeret, velletis vicissim ei ob religionem invaso opem ferre? dixit vellemus: addidi "militum quoque accessionem omnem interdicere et prohibere pro virili ad Gallum velletis, utpote contra confederatum vestrum intentatam?" Respondit, "de hoc ad Status referre vellem, et arbitror obtineri posse;" tametsi Gallie Rex plurima liberalitatis et munificentiae argumenta per Germaniam ediderit, ut in Wirtenbergensi restituendo, pro quo restituendo pecuniam mutuo dedit; et cum resolveretur mutuum, dono dedit septuaginta quinque milia coronatorum, et quod apud Bavaros quoque non exiguam summam superioribus annis deposuerit. Ad quod ego Serenissimum Anglie Regem pensionis Gallicæ partem contribuisse respondi. Hæc et istiusmodi commemoravit inter equitandum, domum rediens, primo enim ad eum accessimus a venatione redeuntem. Ubi aliquandiu domi fuisset, litterasque Serenissimi Regis perlegisset, ad me revocatum dixit se tormenta a se detenta libenter relaxaturum, ac suis scripturum ut id faciant, nec se ea remoraturum fuisse, si cognovisset ea Regis esse: tum nonnulla quoque in Helvetijs detineri, se suspicatum ea a Romano Episcopo submissa esse, quandoquidem litteras plurimas Brunswicensis ad Romanum Episcopum, et Ejusdem

rursus ad Ducem, auxilia et subsidia promittentis, in cancellaria capti Ducis invenerit. Deinde ad plausibilia orationem convertit, dicens Serenissimum Anglie Regem potentia et opibus plurimum pollere, sibi quoque voluptati et honori fore aliquot angelottorum milia a Serenissimo Rege capere, etsi ante hac a nullo unquam Rege quicquam acceperit, nec etiam ambierit, sed angelottorum auro pulchre urbem aliquam communiri et tutari posse contra Papis-tarum incursiones. Postero die iterum cum eo egi de Gallicis capitaneis Francfordiæ residentibus in invidiam et odium Protestantium, tanquam ijs consentientibus et Anglie Regis hostes foventibus. Ad quod inquit se conscio vel authore hoc non fieri, et liberum fore Anglie Regem eo capitaneum aliquem collocare: se nullum militem ex sua ditione hoc tempore emittere velle, Senatus quoque hujus urbis aliquot hic commorantibus commeatum ad Gallie Regem proficiscendi denegavit. Omnes enim Protestantes in suis ditionibus modo quam possunt militem domi continent, sed hoc genus hominum nulla legum severitate coerceri potest, et maxime innupti et nobiles. Litteræ tuæ, præterquam quod mihi gratissimæ fuerunt, ornatissime Domine Secretarie, tum etiam rebus peragendis commodissimæ: quo enim tempore ad Lant-gravium cum Heraldo profectus sum, eo ipso is litteras ad me Francfordiam misit, verum alio itinere, de pedite, quem modo Cunradus Pfenning conscribit, quas versas ad Serenissimum Regem mitto.¹

An Dieta Wormatiensis successura sit, nondum satis sciri potest. Cesarem modo institutum iter Ratisbonam tenere constat, ferturque crastina die Spiram adventurus, quo me contulissem ut Episcopum Westmonasteriensem salutassem, si non in continua expectatione essem nuncij Argentinam missi. Admodum scire cupio que Magnificentiae tuæ voluntas sit, an Oratorem Regium Ratisbonam prosequi debeam, an hic subsistere; nihil enim tam desydero, quam omnia juxta Serenissimi Regis prescriptum facere.

Hesterno die primum nuncius, quem Argentinam cum tuis litteris ad Doctorem Brunonem misi, redijt, qui in Comitijs Wormatiensibus quæ is successura putat, se eam causam (de qua ad eum scripsisti) coram Statibus tractaturum mihi scribit; rogavi quoque ex eo ut de quibusdam alijs ad me rescriberet, quod, quia partim fecit, eas integras litteras ad Dominationem tuam transmittit.² Rogo ut Domino Petro collegæ tuo officiose me com-

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime, eo quo mihi innotuit die Lantgravium Spiram ad Cesarem proficisci, illuc quoque me recepi, animum adhibiturus, quidnam ibi tractaretur die Dominico, qui fuit 28 Martij. Lantgravio sub horam decimam ad Spiram appropinquant, Cesar obviam misit Mons^r le Grand et Procancellarium Naves, inter quos medius urbem ingressus est. Statim ubi ex equo descendisset Lantgravius, pransum ivit ad Comitem Palatinum, qui ad diem Veneris proximum Spiram una cum uxore advenerat, prandio facto in hospitium suum se retulit, in quod Naves post secundam advenit horam, ubi sermone aliquandiu protracto ad signum tertiæ Naves Lantgravium ad Cesarem adduxit, quem Cesar intra cubiculum suum consistens ad ostium porrecta manu excepit. Cesar Secum habuit Naves, Lantgravius suum Cancellarium, et Doctorem Gualterum, qui omnibus semotis ac ostio clauso simul simul pene ad mediam horam fuerunt. Tum Comes Willielmus Furstenbergius, signo ad ostium leniter facto, intromissus quoque est: tum post aliquantum temporis Lantgravius una cum suis ac Comite dicto, intimum Cesaris cubiculum egressus, in secundo aliquamdiu consedit: deinde in Cesaris cubiculum revocatus una cum suo Cancellario et Doctore Gualtero, ad integram horam cum Cesare fuit, Comes Guilielmus tum foris permanens post horam circiter dimidiam abiit: Lantgravium accedentem et revertentem observavi: postridie quoque Lantgravium concione intra suas ædes habita ad Palatinum octava accedentem, ubi Granvella et Naves adfuerunt, et simul omnes post undecimam permanserunt, prosecutus sum; qui in domum suam regressus mihi ad se advocato dixit, “adsis domi meæ sub

VICESIMA septima hujus mensis misi ad vos litteras, Ornatissime Domine Pagethe, per Ruedragon omnium eorum que apud Lantgravium acta sunt. Eo ipso die intellexi Lantgravium ad Cæsarem Spiram contendere, quo me quoque contuli, tum ut observarem quæ ibi agerentur, tum ut Oratorem Regium Episcopum Westmonasteriensem debito offitio prosequeretur, que ibi inter Cæsarem et Lantgravium acta sunt, Serenissimo Regi descripsi. Doctor Hans Bruno hic Spiræ quoque fuit, qui ea que hic subscribam, prius mihi, posterius quoque Domino Westmonasteriensi sub multis verbis me coram enarravit se ex singulari amore et observantia erga Serenissimum Angliæ Regem, cujus beneficia et munificentiam expertus sit se huc advenisse, ut Comiti Willielmo a Furstenberg comes et socius itineris in Angliam esset. Eum enim Comitem decrevisse ad Serenissimum Angliæ Regem hinc proficisci, acceptis a Cesare commendatijs litteris ad Serenissimum Regem ut sua obsequia et servitia presens coram offeret. Sed quandoquidem modo intellexerit Serenissimo Regi tum de Ducibus belli tum de militibus satis pro præsentī usu provisum, imo profectionem institutam differendam, et animum Regis prius litteris explorandum, Comiti persuasisse. Aiebat autem Doctor Bruno se duabus potissimum causis quas ex re Serenissimi Regi non leves fore crediderit, persuasum fuisse, ut eam se profectionem suscepturum Comiti receperit. Prior autem causa est, quandoquidem sciat Gallos constituisse valido exercitu Caletum, Gynes, et Bulloniam, simul obsidere, ac potenti classe mari clauso comeatus omnem subvectionem avertere, maxime Cesare in Italiam digresso, ideo, si hoc a Gallis factum fuerit, ad eas obsidiones levandas Comitem, ut qui autoritate et gratia plurimum apud militem Germanicum valeat, usui esse posse; vel ut sub Principe Pedemontium, qui modo servitium ejus ambiat, Gallo negotium in patria de Bres faciat. Secunda, ut quoniam Galli in Superioris Alemanie partibus, maxime circa Argentinam et confinia Helvetiorum, suas practicas militares plerumque habeant, hunc Comitem viciniorem eas facile disturbare et disjicere posse levi equite; adeoque Doctor Bruno non abs re arbitratur, hunc Comitem pensione aliqua, vel cathena data, in officio fovendum et conciliandum in futuros eventus, ne animum ad Gallos, quos eum ambire Bruno putat, adjiciat. Hec ille ad Dominationem tuam perscribi cupiebat, ac Serenissimi Regis responsum per me sibi referri; adeoque hæc vobis deliberanda significo, consensu Domini Westmonasteriensis, Oratoris Regij, non tam quod mihi approbentur, vel ex usu Serenissimi Regis fore videantur, quam ne officio meo defuisse videar, dictus enim Comes Ajacis quam Agamemnonis prestantissimorum juditio similior est. Gallie Regem sub interesse magno pecuniam ab Helvetijs mutuo accipere ad me perscriptum esse. Ex Cancellario Lantgravij hoc mane rogavi, num putet Conventum Wormatie indictum successurum, qui mihi respondit Status omnes aut, eorum nomine, primores et delectos Wormatie omnino conventuros, antequam Ratisbonam accedant; quare rogo ut, si quid vel ibi, vel Ratisbonæ, me facere velitis, hoc primo tempore Francfordiam mihi significetis, nam is Conventus non diu duraturus putatur. An ipsi Principes ad Comitata accessuri sint, nondum certo scitur. Lantgravius mihi dixit Cesarem quidem hoc a se petere, verum se in diversa esse sententia. Non incommodum judico ut Serenissimus Rex amica aliqua epistola et congratulatione de novi honoris accessione Palatinum demereatur; nam, preterquam quod is hoc a Serenissimo Rege expectat (ut nuper vobis significavi) tum ea veteris amicitie confirmatio et renovatio amiciorum et addictiorum eum Serenissimo Regi faciet. Nam Galli ad hunc Principem modo crebriores accessus faciunt. Rogo ut Domino Petro, college tuo, offitiosissime me commendes. Ego omnia mea officia et studia amanter Dominationi tue defero. MCCCXXXIV. CARNE to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

PLEASITH yt your moste honerable Lordshipes. The 29th of the laste I receyved your Lordships moste honerable letters of the 26 of the same, with a letter to be delyvered to the Quene here, touchinge the passage of Courtpenynges bande, and the lycens for the corne that Maister Dymoke haeth provyded for the Kinges Majestie at Dordright. The Quene was that daye goone a huntynge, and night before She came home, I coulde not speke with Her. Then the next morowe I made suyte to have accesse unto Her. She poynted me the after noone at two of the clocke, at what tyme I went to Her and delyvered the letter that was sent to Her, the President Score then beinge present. After She hadd redde the letter, She askede me, whether I hadd eny thinge to saye to Her more. I tolde Her that I wolde gladly have Her Majestes answer touchinge the sayde letter. She sayde the letter was for twoo thinges, the one was for corne, the other for the passage of Courtpenynges bande; and sayede She moche mervelede that Courtpenynge came not hither, and was veray earnest in that matier, that She wolde have hym here, aswell for to provyde that the Kinges Majeste maye be well servede, as for the suertye of the contre here duringe the passage of the souldiors. After longe commynication, She sayde She wolde consult with her Counsaile, and then make me answer. Hyt was the next daye after in the evenynge, before I coulde get an answer, for She sent for the Duke of Arscot, which was at Mownse, before I coulde opteyne hit. At my commynge to Her, the Duke of Arscot and the President Score beinge there, She sayde that She dyd moche mervell, that thEmperor ys soo handeled by the Kinges Commyssioners, who presumede to muster within thEmperors lande, without leve and agenst the commandement of thEmperors Counsaile in Gelders, as they have doen nowe in musteringe of Courtpenynges bande at Elton in Gelderlande; and was in a greate color, and sayde playnly She woll not enduer hyt, and recyted Landeberke and Riffenberkes bandes. After all thexcuses that I coulde make for to pacyffie Her, at lengthe She came to this determynation, that yf they attempt to passe tyll She hadd spooked with Courtpenyng, She wolde cause them to be hewyd to peces, and hanged, asmanye as might bee taken: and further that Courtpenynge shulde remove his bande out of thEmperors lande before his commynge, or elles not to comme; for yf hee came, She wolde suerly have hym hanged, before hee departede herehens: and so willed me in any wise to advertyse the Commyssaries. And thoughe hee do remove them out of

thEmperors lande, yet they shall not passe in no wise, tyll Courtpenynge hadd spoken with Her, and sayde that She hadd sent to Mons' de Howstrade, Governor of Gelders, to be redy with his bandes of horsmen, that noone do passe, in case they comme ferther in thEmperors domynyons, without slayne or taken: and otherwyse She woll not doo. I layde that they had noo place to remove, and that they payde honestly for all thinges that they tooke, and that hyt was not thEmperors lande, but an Abbyes lande, who hadd given them lycens, as the Commyssaries hadd informed me. Then She sayde that thEmperour ys defendour of hyt, and that hit ys in Gelderlande; and willed the President Score to rede the complaynt of the Abbeys of Elton, where the musters were made, and also the complayntes of thEmperors Counsaile of Gelderlande. She wolde not agree in no wyse, that the souldiors shulde passe, whille Courtpenynge were commynge hether, for thEmperor hadd apoynted Her first to speke with Courtpenynge, and no otherwise they shulde not. The 30th of the last arryved here Bestian Lucas¹, the Kinges Majestes servant, from the Commyssaries that bee with Courtpenynge, with a letter from them to me of the 27th of the same, advertisinge me howe they were disapoynted of there furst mustering place, and that Courtpenynge shall repayre hether with spede, immediatly upon the disspatch of the musters, then beinge in good forwardnes at Elton aforsaide. I showed Her that I thought Courtpenynge was in his jorney hitherwarde alredye. She sayde, "let hym not comme " hither, before he haeth removed his bande from thEmperors lande," for yf he come, She sayde, She wolde hange hym. I tolde Her, I thought hee beinge in his jorney, the post shulde not mete with hym, and therfor I thought hee wolde be here before he might have eny knowlege of her determynation to remove his men to eny other place. Then She sayde She wolde sende hym backe agen. I tolde Her the Protestantes wolde in no wise suffer them to tarrye within enye of there domynyons, and other places bee noone ther-aboughtes; and, yf they shulde nowe remove, they hadd no place to go too; and yf they shulde breake asundre and not comme forwardes, the Kinges Majestie shulde not oonlye leese his money payde them, but also be disapoynted of his enterpryse, which I besought Her to consider, and the greате importunance therof. She sayde the fault ys in the capitayne, that wolde muster them in thEmperors lande agenst her will, and wolde not comme to speke with Her, as thEmperor hadd apoynted in her presens. This She sayde She coule not enduer. Bestian shewed me, to whom the Commyssaries willed me to give credence, yf the souldiours shulde be set forwardes without lycens to passe, and eny of them shulde bee letted by thEmperialles, the hoole wolde take therby occasion to thinke them selves discharged of there oeth given to there capitayne, and so wolde not comme to the place apoynted them, wherby the Kinges Majeste shulde be clene disapoynted of them. Therfor I have sent Fraunces the post with your Lordshipes letter to the Commyssaries, advertysinge them ferther of thaunswer I hadd here, and what they here wolde have doen before the lycens wolde bee granted to passe, wherof your Lordships shall receyve a cople herwith.¹ I am enformed, of suche a place that shulde knowe the truythe of there procedinges here, that Courtpenynges commynge hether shulde greatly pacyffye the Quene, thoughe he came before the removinge of his bande from the place they be in nowe, soo that he comme before he here of the determynation made here nowe, and shulde not tarry for his dispache; and that the only thinge whye She wolde have hym hither ys, that hee shulde take an oethe after the meen of warres sorte; that yf his souldiors do eny hurt in there passage, to thEmperors subjectes, hee shall see hyt recompenced, and that after he bee discharged of his sayde bande, he do retorne hether to answer and satysfye the hurtes doen, yf eny bee provyde doen by his sayde bande; and condiscondinge to this he shulde satysfie the Quene, and so bee dispatched without any ferther dyffyeultie. Therfor I thought good to wright to the Commissaries, that hee at his commynge hether take upon hym not to here of the determynation nowe made here, tyll his commynge hether.

This doen, I besought Hyr to knowe her pleasure touchinge the corne, which was wreten to Her for. She sayde She coude not make me no other answer therin, then She hadd made me dyvers tymes before, that ys, She can graunt no lycens for the corne of Dordright, thoughe She receyve never so many letters from the Kinges Majeste Hymself or his Counsaile; and ys so precyse therin, that all that maye be spooked therin woll not serve. As for Hansterdame corne She saye there wolde be no difficultie to graunt more; asmoche as might be hadd, for there commyth but Eastelonde corne. There ys no remedy for the corne provided by Maister Dymoke at Dordright, oonles hyt comme from thEmperor Hymself, yet all the wayes that might be devised by Mr Dymoke, or that I coude immagen for the opteynyng of hyt, haeth byn usede; but hyt servyth not; and yf my lyef hadd byn apon hyt, I coude doo no more in boeth causes.

Besechinge moste humbly your most honorable Lordships so to advertyce the Kinges moste excellent Majestie of my doinges herin, that Hys Highnes, of his moste benynge accustomed clementie, maye take my doinges herin in good and gracious part: and, yf ther might be eny thinge more doen for the opteynyng of the premysses, then is doen, to impute hyt to myn ignorantie, and not to the lake of good will or peyne to be taken therin. Thei be wexede here veraye styff in there procedinges nowe of late; what the cause ys I can not tell. As knowith Almightye God, Who preserve your moste honorable Lordshipes in helth and longe lyef. MCCCXXXV. CARNE to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

PLEASITHE yt your moste honorable Lordshipes. Yesternight arryved here Capitayne Courtpenynge. Incontynent I dyd sende to the President to apoynt me, when this morninge I might speake with hym (who apoynted me eight of the clocke). To whom at the hower apoynted I went, and the sayde capitayne with me. When I hadd spoken with hym, and shewed hym of the sayde capitaynes arryvall, accordinge to the Quenes pleasure, here, and that he was present, prainge hym that he wolde disspache hym with expedition; who sayde hee wolde owt of hande, and gyve an order for the passage of his bande. But hee sayde that I might not be present, for he must speake with hym aloone. And prayed me too take patiens and to departe, levinge Courtpenynge with hym, sayinge that he wolde sende hym to me agen owt of hande, and yf there were eny differens betwixt them I shulde be advertysede therof, but in nowise hee wolde have me present. The thinge that they here requyred of hym is, that hee shall satisfye the hurtes that shalbe doen by his souldiors in there passage thoroughe thies countries, and that he shall not, duringe this warres betwixt the Kinges Majeste and the Frenche Kinge, serve agenst thEmperor or his countries. And herof the President wolde have a byll, and his seale to hyt; and here-apon hee ys disspachede. The President incontynent disspached to Mons^r de Haulstrade² for to suffer them to passe: also haeth disspached an other to the Quene, to signyffie his expedition here, that She might sende to the chief capitaynes of thother bandes in that quarters, where She ys, or where hyt shalbe nedfull for ther passage. The President was in hande with hym to serve thEmperour, Who shulde provyde hym of a good pention. He made hym answer that he was the Kinges Majestes servant, and hadd of His Majeste a pention while he leved; that he coulede serve no man without His Majestes lycens. The Presydent sayde he might take his pention of the Kinges Majeste, and also serve thEmperor, when the Kinges Majeste might spare hym; for thEmperor, he sayde, wolde be content he to have his pention of the Kinges Majeste. He sayde he coulede be content to serve thEmperors Majeste before eny man next to his master, but he coulede graunt to no servys without the Kinges Majeste his mayster ys pleasure knowen, and therfor coulede make hym no answer therin. The Presydent wolde have hadd hym to dynner. The souldiors must passe by ruptes 10, 20, 30, 40 in companye, and every rutmayster haeth a bill of the coronell, conteynynge the name of every souldior appoynted to hym, that noone other loyterers lepe in emongs them. And so nowe I trust they may passe quyetlie, whiche I thought good to advertysc your moste honerable Lordshipes withe diligens. I have also sent to the Commyssaries that be with the souldiors, to signyffye the same to them. And havinge noo other, I praye Almighty God to conserve your Lordships in longe and prossperous lyef. From Bruxelles, the 4th of Apriel.

Your moste bounden daily beadman,

Post scripta. The Presydent showed Courtpenynge nowe, when hee brought hym his bill for the performans of his promys, that hee thought best he departed not fare herehens till he hadd harde from the Quene, to Whom hee haeth disspached with diligens, to knowe whether hyr pleasure shalbe to have eny other thinge observed in the sayde passage then the Presydent haeth ordered, that he maye bee the sooner advertised therof, and haeth sent to me also to have oone in aredynes to sende to advertise the sayde Courtpenynge, where he shalbe, therof, but hee hymself ys expedited of as moch they here requyred of his person at this tyme. For the passage of the sayde souldiors the Presydent haeth wreten, in the absens of Mons^r de Haulstrade, to the Chancelor of Gelders at Arnem. Courtpenynge haeth sent to his lieftenaunt and capitaynes howe they shall set forwardes, and he hymself tarryeth at Andwerpe, tyll the Quenes pleasure here be ferther knowen touching the sayde passage, and also howe that his bande commyth forward.

MCCCXXXVI. HARVEL to KING HENRY VIII.¹

Most Sacred Mageste.

IT may please Your Highnes to be advertisid that the Venecian Ambsatour is lately retornid from Constantinople, wher he left the thinges in peacible state; and raportith that Ferdinando hath sent his Oratour to the Turke to require the prorogacion of trewis for another yere.

By letters from Rome the Bushop had put in prison the Duke of Florences Secretary, and taken al his writinges, wich is reputid a thing very strange and inusitate, to intrete a publike parson after soche maner; wherapon it is not to be marvellid, if the said Duke take this acte most grevously. And lamenting thImperial Oratour with the Bushop apou this matter, He answerid that the said Secretarye was rather a spye then a publike parson, for he had never negocid with Him nor with the Cardinal Fernesye nor braught letter of credence from the Duke; and that of this matter He had certefied thEmperour largely, and that al thinges shalbe wel knowen apou what ground he hath procedid.

It was noysid that the Bushop hath discoverid a conspiracion ayenst Him, in the wich the said Secretary shold be intelligent, wich is stimid a fable; but it is wel knowen that the Bushop barith a grete hate and envye to the Duke of Florence aswel for olde cawsis as also for the late expulsion of certaine friers owt of Florence for certaine sedicious offences ayenst the Duke, wich hath renewid the Bushops coler ayenst him; whose ire is passing furious and can not be refraynid, nother by his olde age, nother by his dignite, nother by any other respect; as often experience hath declarid in Him.

It hath ben also writen from Rome, that the French King shold send 12 persons to the Concel at Trent, to procure the publishing of a censure ayenst Your Mageste, but I hope the same censure shalbe one day executid ayenst the said King, as manifest ennemy and proditour to the Cristen state, for his execrable lige and amitye with thinfidelles.

Of the Concel at Trent I here nothing worthe memorye, but that it dependith apou the Diet of Ratisbona.

The Markes of Guastos deth hath ben divulgid for certaine, and that John de Vegla, who was Ambsatour in Rome for thEmperour, is comme to ThItalian soldates are in grete expectation to be usid in Your Magestes service, being the romoures mightely spred that the same wil make a good band of this nacion, inflammid beyond opinion to be in Your Magestes wagis, in somoche that I lacke no visitacion of infinite soldates. And divers Albanes are departid with a good companye of horsemen towardes England accompanid with my letters to Your Mageste, and I thinke divers other wil shortely depart for England at ther awne costes and charges, so grete is ther desire to serve Your Mageste for the good raportes they have of the same to intrete soldates best of any living Prince.

Thus God preserve Your Regal Mageste in most prosperous helth and felicite. From Venice, the 4 of April, 1546.

MCCCXXXVII. PAGET to MONT.¹

MAISTER MOUNT. After my right hartye commendations. You shall understande that the Kinges Majeste hath seen your sundry letters, sent aswell by Nicolas the currouer as by Rouge Dragon, and taking your advertisementes in the same in very good and gracious part, hath willed me, for aunswer, to signifye unto youe His Highnes pleasour is, you shall take oportunitye to have acces unto the sayd Landsgrave; and, after His Highnes moost harty commendations, gyve unto him the like thanks, aswell for his frank opening unto you of his conferences with thEmpereur at his being lately at Spyres, and his redynes for the deliverey of thaccubutes, as also for his promise (which His Highnes prayeth him to performe) to prosecute and punishe that traytour Reiffenbergh, and for his gentle offre of his freendeship otherwayes; wherein His Majeste will not omitt to gratifye him in semblable sorte. taking occasion to shewe unto him that you have advertised hither the communication which you and he had at your late being togidres, you shall saye, that whereas, you alledging that His Majeste did agree with them in sum of the principal poinctes of religion, he aunswered the same to be trewe, but yet that His Majeste, for defence of the same thinges, had refused, being often desyred, to entre league; His Majeste (as yourself knoweth) was never, nother by him nor any other Prince, nor their agentes or commissioners, moved to any such thing, nor no such overture made to His Majeste. Mary, whenne you and M^r Buckler had lyen there woll nere an hole yere, with commission to have communed and concluded with him and others a league, touching such poinctes of religion, as wherin His Majeste and they do accorde; you wer delayed from tyme to tyme, and at the last wer fayne to departe without any aunswer, so as, if any fault wer in that part, it rested in themselves, and not in His Majeste. Nevertheles, you may signifye unto him, that whereas His Majeste sendeth at this present M^r Mason, his Secretary for the French tongue, unto the Counte Palatin Elector¹, both to congratulate him that

¹ A minute of the King's "Instructions to his trusty and right welbeloved Counsayllour John "Mason Esquier, His Highnes Secretary in the French tongue, whom His Majestie sendeth "presently as his Ambassadeur to Duke Fredericke Counte Palatyn," remains in the State Paper Office. He is instructed to go in company with Duke Philip to the residence of the Elector Palatine, to congratulate him on his accession to the Electorate, and to apologize for that not having been done before. Masone was then to inform him that Duke Philip his nephew, having visited England for the purpose of concluding articles for a certain number of troops to enter Henry's service, made proposals for a marriage with the Lady Mary. Henry considering his former friendship with the Elector, the antiquity and nobility of his family, and the personal merits of Duke Philip, was inclined to favour the overture, and, to further it, proposed a renovation of the old friendship between Henry and the Elector and other his friends, amongst whom the Landgrave was considered to be one of the chief; "whereby should not only growe a wonderfull "great benefite and staye to Christian Religion, for that many of the Princes and States depending "upon him, being the principall Elector, woold in matters of religion lene to him and follow his "determination," but also the proposed marriage of his nephew Duke Philip should thereby come the sooner to perfection. Masone was then to declare the favourable position of the Princess Mary who, since the last communication relative to a marriage, had been legitimated, and made heritable to the Crown of England, failing issue of Prince Edward; and to propose, that the Elector should send trusty agents to the English Court, not only to confer on the above points, and on the Elector's claim to the Crown of Denmark; but that, if the Elector would suspend his resolution in matters of religion until he had declared his meaning, by such agents, to Henry, who finding Him in doctrine and religion conformable to God's Gospel and His holy Scripture, the Elector might be contented to join himself and his friends with Henry therein, "whereby he should work "the moost notable act that ever was wrought to the stay and quiet of all Christendom."

For the compassing of the Elector and the others to join with Henry in this amity and the unity of doctrine, Masone was directed, by the way, in their journey, to inculcate into Duke Philip's head, that it was the only mean to win Henry's favour to his suit, and therefore he was to be persuaded to work all ways he could for the achieving of the same: and as it was likely the

that vocation, and also to commun with him upon other private maters touching their familie, if it shall like him, the Landsgrave, to sende thither

Elector and his friends would desire Masone to enter into particulars, he was furnished with "a brief memorial of sum of the speciall pointes," whereunto Henry wished the said Elector and his friends would condescend: which memorial is as follows:

"Certain articles to be set furth by Mr Mason as of hymself to the Duke Frederick " thElector.

"Furst, that nother those which be now the principall Contrahentes nor any such as shall hereafter entre into the same shall in any wise accorde condescend or agree to any General Concel to be called or kept by thauthoritye of the Bishop of Rome.

"Item, that noon of the sayd confederatye shall consent or agree to any place for the keping of a Generall without the speciall consent in writing of his Confederates.

"Item, that noon of the sayd Confederates which shall now joyn &c. shall in any wise assent, agree or confesse by any meanes that the Bishop of Rome hath any other or greter power, jurisdiction or authoritye, then any other Bishop hath.

"Item, that after the retourne out of England of thElectours man, sumwhat perceyving parte of our mynd, the forsaid principall Contrahentes shall agree and determyn upon an indifferent place for thassemble and meeting of lerned men to be sent from eche of Us to debate, dispute and consydre by the right lyne of Scripture without borrowing of will or fantazye the other pointes of religion now in difference from ours, and that such men be sent from ech one of Us, as be not only lerned, but also men willing an unite in Christendom, men of an upright judgement, discretion, temperance and gret consyderation; which lerned men shall indifferently reaport to ech of their masters to what pointes and issues they be descended in the said maters of religion.

"Item, that noone of the Confederates which now entre or that shall entre hereafter, shall not after their entre by any meanes decline from any of the pointes of religion or any thing or covenant which shalbe by them nowe furst agreed upon amonges them in these articles, or that shall hereafter be agreed upon, nor shall relent to any other sect or partye in matiers of religion, but holy stand to use mainteyn and defende this their confederatye, and all other thinges wherupon they shall hereafter at any tyme agree.

"Item, that in cace any of the said Confederates, which now entre or hereafter shall entre into this league, shalbe invaded by any Prince or Potentate whatsoever for any mater or thing which he by his confederatye is or shalbe hereafter bounde to stande unto and to serve, then all the rest of the Confederates for the tyme being shall defende ayde and assist him so invaded, in such sort as shalbe more particularly set furthe and accorded by their agreementes at the conclusion and perfaicting of this treatye.

"Item, that none of the sayd Confederates which now be or hereafter shalbe, shall suffre any of their subgetes to serve in the warres thennemye or thennemys to any of his Confederates. And in cace any of his sayd subgetes attempt it without his knoweledge the same then to be taken for rebelles and traitours and their landes and goodes confiscated.

"Item, they shall not suffre (asmoch as they shalbe able) the subgetes of any other Prince or State to passe through their cuntreys to the service of thennemye of any of the Confederates but shall let them asmoch as they can.

"Item, they shall from tyme to tyme signifye to the Kinges Majestie, or to such as shalbe his Ambassadour or Agent in those partes of Almayn, the state of their affayres as in any wise tende to thadvancement or hinderaunce of this confederatye; like as His Majestie will do the same to them agayn as occasion shall serve.

"Item, that the said Elector and also Duke Philip do labour to get as many of thElectours and other the Princes and pryncipall townes of thEmpire to entre into this treaty as they can."

any personage instructed of his minde, touching a confederacye with His Majestye, it shalbe long of him self, if the thing grow not to sum good ende. And here you must, M^r Mount, work the Lansgrave to such effect, as you shall perceive by M^r Mason His Majeste mindeth; which is both godly, honorable, and stable, for the quietnes of Christendom, and the suretye of such as shall take the waye which His Majeste entendeth. M^r Mason is appoincted to communicate unto youe his charge in that behalf, to thintent you may procede the better; and you must do the semblable to him of your procedinges, to thentent His Majestes purposes may go forwarde at both your handes; for His Majeste taketh you both to be men of trust, and that, setting all private affections or conceiptes apart, you will with all dexterite, to thuttermoost of your wittes and lerning, avaunce and sett forwardes his thinges committed to your chardge at this present.

And whereas it appereth in your sayd letters, that the Lansgrave sayd if it woold like His Majeste to lay in deposito 100000 crounes for the defence of the league, that thenne His Highnes shuld in dede shewe that there wer cause, why they shuld trust in his frendship; and afterward in a further communication declared unto youe, that, albeit he never had received nor desyred any money of any Prince, yet he woold take it in lieu of a great pleasour, and of a gret honour exhibited unto him, to receive at the Kinges Majestes handes sum of his aungelles; you shall say unto him, touching both those poinctes, that to the furst His Majeste supposeth they cannot thinke it reasonable that He shuld be at the chardge, for his part, of 100000 crouns, to be layd in deposito to theyr use, except they also on thother syde, for their part, do the thing for His Majeste that may be reciprocq, and contrevaille the gratuitye, which they requyre at His Majestes hande; which yet hath never, as you knowe, bene profered to His Highnes, nor none overture made by any personne, that woold stande to the same. And as touching the Landsgraves receiving in particuler of His Majestes aungelles, you may say, that His Highnes, for his part, will think no lesse pleasour and honour done to Him by the Landsgrave to receyve his pension, then the Lansgrave doth for his part, if His Highnes do give unto him the same. Wherefor His Majeste, thinking to have him an assured freende to Hys Highnes before all other, and that in cace His Highnes shuld have nede of men of those quarters, he woold alwayes see Him furnished of good capitains, to be enterteyned by the Lansgrave, with sum portion of His Majestes pention now to be gyven, to bring men of warre, whenne His Highnes woold call for them, and that also he woold do what he canne by himself and his freendes to staye the men of

warre from going to serve his ennemies: upon these condicions His Majeste wilbe contented, if it shall like him to take the same, to gyve him a yerely pention of 10000 florins; which you shall offre unto him with as good woordes as you canne. And consydering this behaviour now of late of the French King towards them, with the dispayre they ar in never to have Him relent in any part of religion towards them, it is thought here that both the Landsgrave and others have good cause to seke freendship at His Majestes hande, and wilbe the easelyer induced to do their uttermoost for stayng their men from going to the French Kinges service, and also to sende from them, out of those partes, those French agentes, which be there as espialles upon them. For now they see in plain termes, wheder Rickrade, Bassefontayn, Laplanche, and Fraxinus be vayn practisers and lyers, or no; now they see wherunto all the French Kinges fayre promises and gret offres and bravites be cum unto; surely, if they will, they may see that He useth them as He doth the Scottes, even for his only slaves, to spende their blood for the only feding of fayre woordes; and now you may tell the Landgrave, Bruno, and Sturmius, they fynde my saing to them at Calais, touching the French King, trewe, and that I saye they may yet beware of Him in tyme ynough, if they list. His Majeste wisheth them, for the good will He beareth them, to looke substancially to their proceedinges; and, what fayre promises so ever be made for the delivercy of the Duke of Brunswyk, not to be over hasty to let him slip out of their fingers, leest they do afterwarde peraventure repent them. And on thother part touching the Bishop of Mentz, on whose entre into their league you write they do dispayre, if they can not get him to be one of their syde, yet wisely so entreteyn him, as he fall not their part adversarye against them.

As concerning Court pennink, I doubt not but that youe have enformed the Landsgrave, er this tyme, that they be for the Kinges Majeste, likeas hereafter also from tyme to tyme he shalbe advertised, if His Majeste levye any men by any other Coronell.

As touching Counte Guillaume, His Majeste perceiving by your letters his desyre to serve His Highnes, albeit for this present His Majeste be sufficiently furnished of men for this yere, yet in respect both of the gentle offre of the sayd Countye, and of the reputation wherin His Majeste hath him for his experience and knowelege to serve when he shalbe called, His Highnes is contented, if that he will accept the offer, that you shall profer him His Highnes yerely pention of 5000 gilderns; for the which His Highnes lookith he shall convenaunt to be alwayes in arredynes to serve Hys Majeste before all others, himself in persone, and a competent nombre upon warning and money,

according to such convenauntes and for such wages as you shall receyve in a scedule herin closed¹, and do thuttermost he can, by himself and his freendes, to empeche the levying and passage of any men of warre to the service of his ennemies.

Asfor Bruno, you shall saye unto him that the Kinges Majeste thanketh him for his gentle advertisementes, and so do I the like; and saye unto him that whereas he offreth to cum hither, in cace the French men levye any gret nombres in those partes, the Kinges Majeste requyreth him, wheder there be any such levying or no, to take the payn to repayr hither furthwith in diligence, fully instructed of all thinges in those partes or eles where, that he can get knoweledge of, which he shall think meet for His Majeste tunderstande.

And how you shall procede in all the premisses I pray you tadvertise His Majeste by this bearer, whom you may kepe for a tyme, until you shall have expedited the same, wherin I pray you to take sum payne, and sum diligence, which shalbe moch to His Majestes contentation. I think best that Bruno cum without any pasport axing of the Regent. He may cum without tarying in any place, and shalbe never asked from whens he cummith, til he cummith to Graveling; nor yet there, so as he passe as in post with letters from M^r Carne in the night, which he may do, and is comunly used. MCCCXXXVIII. A memorial gyven by the KINGES MAJESTIE to the Visconte LISLE, High Admiral of Englande, and Sir William PAGET, Knight, oone of His Majesties two Principall Secretaries, being sent at this tyme in commission¹ to treat and conclude upon a peax with certayn Commissioners sent from the French King at this present for the same purpose.²

FIRST, as touching the place of their meeting, the same to be at Guisnes or Calays, if it may be brought to passe; if not, then to meete for the first tyme upon an indifferent ground, and the place for the next and all other meeting to be appoynted by the discretion of the sayd Visconte and Secretary.

Second, touching Boulloyn and Boullonnoys, our sayd Commissioners shall requyre to have the same, with all the places and fortresses, to be reserved and kept to Us and our heyres for ever. Which if it shalbe refused, they shall then provoke them to declare what part of Bulloyns they woulde have reserved, and if they cum to any reasonable offres, then to advertise us, and therupon further do as they shall here from Us.

Thirdly, touching our pension, they shall requyre the yerely payment therof in forme, and at dayes, according to the former contractes between Us and the French King in that behalf.

Fourthly, touching tharrerages of our pension, they shall requyre the hole in hande, or at the leest the one half, and the residue to be payed at Mychaelmas; and if that day shalbe thought to the Frenchmen to short, thenne to advertise Us what dayes and respite the French men desyre.

Fiftly, touching the recompence of money for the costes and expenses of this warre, and to be expended for the keping of Boulloyn, they shall travaile to get for Us asmoch as they can above thre million of crownes, and not to relent under that somme, until they shall here further of our pleasure, and the same somme to be payd unto Us or our assignes at our town of Calais the furst daye of May, which shalbe in the yere of our Lord God 1556 or 1566, at one payement if they can obteyn it.

Sixtely, touching the Scottes, they shall comprehende them in such sort as they wer comprehended in the last treatye between Us and Fraunce, upon condition also that they shall delivre presently in to `our handes their yong Quene for the performaunce of the mariage with our sonne Prince Edward, and kepe all other convenauntes made with Us in our last treatye of mariage; which deliverey of their yong Quene if they shall refuse, until the tyme appoynted in the last treaty with Scotlande, then our Commissioners shall requyre that such sufficient hostages be layd for the deliverey of Her at the tyme appoynted, and for the performaunce of their treatye, as We shall requyre; and for default of performaunce of convenauntes to be taken for no comprehension.

Seventhly, in all theyr treaty to remembre to reserve and have speciall regard to the preservation of our treatyes with thEmperour and other our frendes.

Finally, our said Commissioners shall advertyse Us from tyme to tyme of their procedinges, and further do as We shall appoynt them in the treaty, eyther by our letters or the letters of our Counsaill accordingly.

MCCCXXXIX. CARNE to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASYTHE yt Your moste excellent Majestye. Yesterdaye arrived here before noone an Ambassador from the Frenche Kinge, callyd Monsir de Estraynge, havinge but very fewe in his company; and in the affternoone was in the Cowrte, and hadd his audience. In the night, abowt 9th of the clocke, Mons^r Score the Presydent sende to mee, desyeringe to speke with me. Who, at my commynge, showed that the Quene ys pleasure was hee shulde signyffye to me the commynge of the sayde Ambassadour, and that She harde not of his commynge, tyll the same daye, beinge at masse; nother noone of the Counsaile here. Before masse was doen, hee was arryved. And She beinge desierous to knowe his ambasad, gave hym audience after none, who hadd nothings to declare unto Her, but generalities of thamytie and good will, that the Frenche Kinge his Mayster barr to the Emperors Majestye and Hyr, and to all thyer countreys and subjectes. In spetiallities hee hadd nothings, but oone,

oone, that was touchinge the passage of thAlmayns throwe thEmperors countre here, to serve Your Majestie agenst his mayster. Wyche his mayster was suerlye enformed not only to passe of ther owne heades, but by expresse licens by Hyr granted, wherof his maister dyd moche mervell, seinge thamytie betwixt Hym and thEmperor was suche, that requyred the contrary: prayinge Hyr therfor so to provyde that noone be suffered to passe throw this countries to serve Your Majestye. Farder showed that the Frenche Kinges pleasur ys that hee shulde remayne here resident, tyll Hee hadd provided another to sende hyther. This was all that hee openyd to the Quene, as the President showed me. To this the Quene made hym answer, touchinge the particler poynt of the passage of the Almayns to serve Your Majestye, that the French Kinge shulde no more mervell at ther passage now, to serve Your Majestye, then Hee dyd of ther passage throwe this countre to serve Hym agenst thEmperor, the warrs beinge betwixt thEmperor and Hym: and farther that She moche merved, thamytie beinge as hee hadd declared, that his mayster doeth suffre suche violences to be doon dayly upon thEmperors subjectes, abowtes the lymytes of boeth countries, for the redresse wherof She haeth written unto Hym, which yf Hee wolde not remedy hyt, She woll fynde remedy for hyt. And as touchinge his taryinge here, She made hym answer She was contented. This was all that was betwixt the Quene and hym, as the sayde Presydent saiede.

Farther hee sayde that this Ambassador ys wone, that was wonte to bee a greate practisioner for the French Kinge in Germaynye heretofore¹, and therfor they have hym suspected, and takyth his commynge hether so sodenly for no goodnes to them. For of late She receyved letters from thEmperors Ambassador Resident in the Frenche Cowrte, who advertysed nothinge of his commynge, as hee sayethe. And sayde ferther that nothinge shulde bee doen or passe betwixt the saide Ambassador and them, but I shulde be made participant therof, to the intent Your Majestye maye be advertysed of the same. This her pleasure was, hee shulde signyfie to me, that I shulde signyfie the same to Your Majestye.

The said Ambassadour cam to this towne a lytle before Mr Dudle delyvered Your Majestyes present sent to the Quene², which She hadd

apoynted to see the same daye, immediatly after She hadd harde masse, as She shulde comme from the Church. Whiche Maister Dudle dyd setforth of the best sorte, and boeth the hacqnes, thobyys, and all the greyhowndes, howndes, and the grete dogges, were as fayer as might bee; that all the people hadd them in admyration to see them soo fayer and so well apoynted. And She Hyre selffe vewede them every oone after an other, aswell the horsses as dogges, and was the gladest woman in the worlde, to every mannes judgement; declaringe that She was so moche beholdinge to Your Majesty, that She coulde not tell howe She might condignlye thanke Your Majeste of your goodnes towards Hyr, in sendinge so noble a present to Hyr, which undoubtedly pleased Hyr wonderfully. Here be noo other occurrantes to advertyse Your Majeste of at this tyme. And this I besech Almighty God to conserve Your moste excellent Majeste in your moste noble royall state, in longe lyef and helth. From Bynkes, the 19th of Apryll.

MCCCXL. LISLE and PAGET to KING HENRY VIII.

It may pleas Your moost excellent Majestie to be advertised that, this morning about 7 of the clock, we arryved here, and found Francisco Bernardo newly cum from Ardre, having left there Mons' de Monluke, the same that hath been the principall worker in this mater, and by whom, as it shuld seame, this practise hath been furst broched to thAmbassadour of Venice in Fraunce, and so from him to Bernardo. For this Monluke hath been these three yeres almoost Ambassadeur at Venice, and he is the same¹ that was now last sent by the French King to the Turke with thEmpereurs Ambassadour, whereby, and by other his wise dealing in his maisters service, he is growen in to speciall favour with the same. last at Ardre, and declaring the likelihode of our cumming hither very shortly, the sayde Monluke (who hath taryed at Ardre ever sithens to morowe shalbe a sevensight) sent woord ymedyately for thAdmiral of Fraunce to cum awaye, who he thinketh is this night at Estaples, or wilbe to morow at the furthest. For whose save cumming to Ardre, he desireth saufeconduit to passe on both sides, to cum and go eche to other of us frely with our traynes, not exceeding a certain nombre; which is accorded, with special remembraunce on our part, that under colour of thAdmiralles cumming to talke with us, Ardre be not refreshed with victailes. Bernardo hopeth well Your Majestic may have an honorable peax, and we will do our best for the same, when we shall commyn with thAdmiral and Monluke. Bernardo sayth the Frenchmen will cum roundely to worke to us at ones, and that we shall habb or nab shortly. As we shall procede, we will not fayle to advertise Your Majestic from tyme to tyme therof accordingly. Beseching God to sende Your Majestic helth, and moost prosperously and long to reign. commendations commendations to my Lord Admyrall and me, with request to take in good part that he is not cum so sone as we, for that he herd not before Tuisdaye of our entent to cum hither so sone. Wheruppon considering the long waye from the French Court¹ to these partes, his cumming is sumwhat the lenger; and that within foure howres after he herd that we shuld cum hither, he sent furth his trayn, appoynting himself to folowe the morow after, which was Wednisday, so as he trusteth, albeit he be but an ill poster, to be at Monstreull upon Monday. Monluc's messenger sayd that the same desyred to have spoken with my Lord Admiral and me from the French Admirall; wherin having before made meanes unto my said Lord and me by Francesco Bernardo, we thought not meet to admitt him, leest that upon such communication, and peradventure sum overture of the substance of the mater, the Frenchmen might take occasion (if thinges had not gon forwarde) to have braved Your Majestie, to have been so desyrous of peax, and dryven to such distres, as You wer glad and fayn to sende your Admiral of Englande and your Secretary to treate with Mons^r Monluc. To the same request now renewed I aunswered, that my Lord Admyral, for certayn Your Highnes affayres, which amonges other thinges he had in chardge of Your Majestie at his departing from the Court, was now, and would be for a tyme, occupied at the camp with Your Majesties Lieutenaunt², who nevertheles upon tharryvall of their Admiral in these partes would take such ordre therin, as he might be redy and I togiders to commun with him and Mons^r Monluc for such purposes, as I and Mons^r Monluc arrived in these quarters. The messenger aunswered that, if my Lord Admirall wer not here, that then Mons^r Monluc desyred to speke with me. I sayd I saw not how we could well meet togiders, and that for the mater I had no commission to treate in it alone. The messenger aunswered, that, consydering the honesty of the cause wherefor he cummeth, with the good opinion he hath in Your Majestie and your ministres, he wolde aventure to cum hither to Calays to morowe to dyne with me, only to do thAdmiralles commendations to me, and to renew his old acquayntaunce with me in Fraunce, and so return to Ardre agayn. Wherin, Sir, seing the request was but a certayn gentlenes, and that also it tended sumwhat to Your Majesties honour, that one of the French Kinges Commissioners shuld cum to your oune town to seeke upon oone of your Commissioners, I aunswered he shuld be welcum; and so talked with

And, if it shall please Your Majestie, of your accustomed goodnes and benignte towards me, to gyve me your licence to say my poore opinion, it wold not be amisse, consydering my Lord of Hertford is here at hand, and shall have occasion to be, during this talke, sumtyme both at Calays and Guisnes, and is Your Majesties Lieutenaunt Generall in these partes, and one of your Pryvey Counsail, that he wer in commission with my Lord Admyrall and me for this treatye; which if it shall like Your Majestie, thenne an other commission may be sent for us three, or any two of us, in like forme to that we have alredy.

Sir, I have delivred your plat to my Lord of Hertford, and declared to him Your Majesties pleasure therin in the presence of my Lord Admyrall and John Rogers Surveyour of Your Majesties workes at Boulloyn, from whom I doubt not but Your Majestie shall here agayn shortly in that behalf.

And as touching your workes at Newhaven, I never saw somoch worke don in so litle tyme, and well withall; for they make but one worke, and rid the thing clene afore them to a perfection. I beleve Youe shall nede non armye there within these 6 wekes. Thus having non other thing worthy advertisement, I pray God to sende Your Majestie moost prosperously and long to reign. MCCCXLII. MASONE to PAGET.¹

ITT may like yow to be advertised, that yesternight we arrived here att Antwerppe, and to morrowe, Godde willing, we woll away. In this journey I have hadde long and sondry conferences wyth the Duke, towching the meanes of the forwarding of his matter, whiche is the joyning of Federike and his freendes wyth the Kinges Highnes, wherein itt is nott to be dowghted, butt he woll do his best; butt ever I have fownde in him a certeyne suspect opinion of Federyke. This morning erly he sent for me to devise, as appered att my comming, att summe length of the matter, in the ende whereof he tolde me, that twoo monthes past, talking wyth Federyke, he perceyved that he tooke itt very ill that the Kinges Highnes hadde nott sent to him any kinde of gratulation, according as other Princes hadde doon, sithen the tyme of his calling to the dignite of thElectour; whereunto forasmoeche as he cowlde litill say himselff, he opened the same to Christofer Mownte, who answered that he wolde be gladdē to repayre unto the Electour wyth His Majestes gratulation, whiche he doughted nott butt His Highnes wolde to be doon, butt bycawse he hadde thereof no letters, he feared the Duke wolde take itt as proceeding of himselff, and therefore thought good to differre the same, untill suche tyme as he might thereof advertise His Majeste. Itt chawnced him the same day to have communication of this matter wyth the Secretary, whose counsell and advise the sayde Electour useth in all thinges; who upon occasion tolde him, that the Electour was so knitt wyth the Frenche King, as he cowlde nott well passe upon any frendshippe wyth the Kinges Highnes.² “Whye,” quod the Duke, “there is no suche bande betwene, that excludeth all other amitie.” “By my trowth,” quod he, “they be in a faire league together.” “This I tell you,” quod the Duke to me, “not, for that I didde beleve him, and I thinke surely that there is nott any thing betwene them butt goodde worddes; butt to thintent that before yow shall to farre wade wyth him in your instructions, you may fele of him in what cace he standeth, for if in dede there be a league concluded betwene them, better

² Another point in Masone's instructions (see p. 97.) was to endeavour to detach the Elector Palatine from the French interest, and particularly to restrain Basfontain, Reekroed, and other French Agents from raising men of war within the Elector's territories for the service of the French King.

“wer itt to kepe all these thinges secret from him than otherwise.” “Didde

MCCCXLIII. PAGET to KING HENRY VIII.

It may pleas Your moost excellent Majestye to be advertised, that according to my letter written yesterdaye, Mons^r Monluc arryved here this daye before dyner, and after familer renewing of old acquaynteaunce on both partes, with sum semblant of rejoygance for that this maner a cause of our meeting shuld be thoccasion therof, with a long discours made of his maisters affection to Your Majestie, of the desyre He with all the rest of his realme had to be in ¹ Masone wrote a subsequent letter the same day to Paget acquainting him he had received intelligence that the Palsgrave and the Bishop of Worms were certainly entered into the league of the Protestants: and also that he (Masone) and Duke Philip had been “secretely advertised” that the Grave Van Rittenberg “was lying in wait to entrap them, and therefore they intended that night to quit Antwerp, and take their way towards Holland into Geldres. Whether the Bishop of Worms here intended was Henry of Bavaria or his successor Thierry II. is uncertain. The “Grave” appears to be the Officer, who has repeatedly occurred since Vol. X. p. 523. by the name of Frederick Van Reyffenberg.

peax and amitye with Your Majestye (so as it might be had, he sayd, honorably, and that they wer not escorsed and fleen to the bones); setting furth here how necessary peax was for them and us to (as he sayd), and what damages and hurtes the poore people suffre dayly on both sydes by reason of the warre, and how in the meane tyme other men, with both your sorowes troubles and devastations of both your realmes, wax rich and sitt and laugh at Youe, caryng not how long Your Majesties contynued therin: he sayd there was two causes of his cumming hither; the one to excuse the long cumming of the Admyral of Fraunce, thother to do a message unto me from the sayd Admyral, which was, that whereas he was cumming to treat with my Lord Admyral and me upon these maters of the peax, consydering that in cace he and we shuld meete and depart without a good conclusion, the woorld shuld note either a gret legierete on both sydes, or a great and mortal ennemitye between Your Majesties, for that the thing having ben so often attempted to be brought to an accorde, both by Princes, private men, and also speciall ministres on both sydes, shuld at last be brought to such dispayre, as, until one had a notable overthrowe, nothing wer like to be concluded; he wished that, before he shuld cum to meet with my Lord Admyrall, the pointes, wherupon the resolution shuld stande, might be first brought to sum perfection by Monluc, and that thenne for the conclusion of the mater both thAdmyralles might assemble togidres; and for that cause he was cum to talke with me of the particularites of the mater, both to gyve me to understande in few woordes (if I woold negocier with him) to what pointes the French King woold descende, and also to here of me agayn Your Majesties resolution in the same; so as, upon knoweledge therof on both sydes, the great personnages might either meet for the conclusion therof, oreles both return home again with les dishonour, both to themselves and their maisters, if the mater shuld fortune not to take good effect. To this, replying in what sort Francisco Bernardo had wrought in this mater (which he confirmed in every thing), and how that upon promesse made that thAdmyral of Fraunce woold meet my Lord Admyrall and me ymedyately, Your Majestie had joyned my Lord Admyral and me in commission to commyn toghethers and not apart, I sayd that if thAdmyral of Fraunce and he, or any other with thAdmyral, woold kepe the meeting promised, that my Lord Admyral and I woold not fayle to meet with the same; mary, to treat with him alone, I could not. Wherfor, I sayd, it shuld be best for the French Admyrall to cum strait to Ardre, according to thappoinctement, and therupon he and we meeting togidres, being fully instructed of his maisters mynde, (as I thought he was for his, as we wer for our part) I sayd, if we did not accorde, the fault shuld shuld be in him, and not in us. “Nay, surely” (quod he) “thAdmyral will cum, but he feareth nothing but long tract of tyme with youe, and litle frute therof, and the burnt child dredithe fyre. The last yere he was provoked by our Ambassadour,” quod he, “with thEmpereur, to cum thither with a gret hoope of a good succes, and at lenth nothing folowed, and this maketh him the more afeared to cum at this tyme, for it shuld touch him moche.” I sayd, if he woold cum, Your Majesties Admyral and I had commaundement to meet him; but to talke with any other man alone, we had not. “Well,” (quod he) “I will eyther go or send to Monstreull upon Mondaye, to meet with Mons^r lAdmyrall, whom, when he cummeth, you shall fynde reasonable and at few woordes. And few woordes is now best,” (quod he) “and litle tyme to be spent herin, for both Mons^r lAdmyrall is such a personage, as cannot be long absent from the Court, and also the mater, having ben often tymes debated before, and brought to certayn pointes, nedeth now no long debate; and therefor he prayeth that such resolucion may be taken in the mater, as within two or thre meetinges the same may be determined, of or on.” And here he cam to the issues of the mater for our part, viz^t, to consyde what somes we woold aske for recompence of Boulloyn, what dayes of payment we woold gyve therfore, and for that they owe unto Your Majestye, and what Your Majestie woold do for the mater of the Scottes; and they woold bring a resolute determination what they woold gyve, and at what dayes both for your arrerages and recompence, and what they woold agree Your Majestie shuld kepe in Boullonnoys in the meane tyme, besides the payment of your pension; and likewise for the mater of the Scottes. And he pressed me to entre in to the particulers of the mater; but I woold not, for that it was against myn instructions, and yet sumwhat I talked in clowdes with him therin, to feale theyr inclinations, and perceive (asmoch as may be perceived by conjectures) that they minde to paye your pension yerely, and nothing in hande (for that they be not able, onles, as he sayd, they shuld be able to do nothing, if they had occasion, eyther to defende or invade any other Prince upon occasion), but looke to have dayes both for your arrerages and recompence, and also for Your Majesties recompence not to cum to such a somme, as Your Majestie hath appointed in your instructions, but to a farre les somme; meaning, as it shuld seame, to make now a peax with Your Majestie taliter qualiter for this tyme, and within a yere or such a tyme to entre sum other further treatye with Your Majestie, therby to make all thinges clere betwen Your Majesties. This, Sir, is but my conjecture upon the talkes betwen us, Monluc saing often, “Let us now make a peax, and this

 “ better perfection, and thinges so established betwen our maisters, as they “ shall passe their old dayes togidres in love and amitie.” But, Sir, what soever my fond conjectures be I shall moost humbly beseche Your Majestie to waye your oune thinges by your great wisdom, and direct the same to me and others your ministres that they may be executed, as shall stande in your moost grave and prudent judgen moost to the glorye of God, Your Highnes honour, and the weale and benefite of your Realme. For the which I pray dayly to God, and to sende Your Majestie moost prosperously and long to lief.
 From Calays, upon Easter even, late in the night, 1546.

Postscripta. Monluc told me that the President of Rowen is in commission with thAdmyral; wherefor it may like Your Majestie to addres also hither M^r Wootton, or such other as shall pleas Your Majestie, for the making of the treatyes in writting, if it shall please God and Your Majestie that the thing cum to that point; and that he bring with him from thens out of your Tresory the certayn knoweledge when the last payment was made of Your Majesties pension, and what ought to be payd yerly, and what is now in arrerages; and in the meane tyme, if we cum to talke, we wooll be sure to aske with the most.

MCCCXLIV. KING HENRY VIII. to HERTFORD, LISLE, PAGET, and N. WOTTON.¹

RIGHT trusty and right welbeloved Cousyns and Counsaylours, and trusty and right welbeloved, We grete you well. Lating you wite, that having seen the letters of you, our Secretary, of the 25th of this instant, and understanding

¹ This minute, which is corrected by Petre, is indorsed: “M. to thErle of Hertford, the Lord

by the same all suche conference as of late hath passed betwene you and Monluke; lyke as We take all your doings in good and thankefull parte, so have We thought good for a more ample declaration of our pleasure to signifie unto you as followeth.

First, where the said Monluke makinge a long rehersall of thold frendship betwene Us and his maister, how needfull and expedient peax is for bothe partes, what great devastation and wasting of the poore people of bothe sides hath byn &c., concludeth that his maister is very desirous to have peax, so as the same might be had honorably, and his realme not excorsed and fleen to the bones; our pleasure is that, at your next meting to githers with the French Commissioners, you shall declare and set furth playnly unto them, that albeit thoccasion of the rapture of that olde amitie betwene the French King and Us (for thassured continuaunce wherof We have heretofore ministered in deedes good occasion) hath proceded only of them, yet have We at all tymes byn very willing, and yet be well pleased, that all thinges may be well and honorably compounded, and have byn contented heretofore to send our Ambassadours, men that We do specially trust, for the debating and concluding of the same, the stay wherof hath proceded only of the wilfull unreasonablenes and want of conformitie of their parte, being their Commissioners in their conferences so moche wedded and addict to their own willes, as without satisfaction of their own will and appetites they woold alwayes breake of, and nothing might be concluded. Wherfor it shalbe necessary that you do tell them, as it wer for an introduction of the mater, in playn termes, that, yf they shall mynd the conclusion of this peax earnestly in deede, as they pretend, they must set aparte all wilfulnes, and thinke that they have to do with a Prince of suche honour, as with froward dealing will not be drawn to their appetites, and yet can be well contented to give eare to frendly and honorable conditions. And here it shalbe well to put them in remembraunce, that We ar not ignorant in what state there maister standeth presently, bothe touching his subjectes, men of warre, penury of victuailles, decay of his navy, &c.; what attemptates they have made without any successe or fruite of the same; how We shall at all tymes be hable to victuall our peeces of that side without daunger; how difficill and almost impossible it is, and shalbe, for them eythar to do us any annoyaunce upon the same, or to victuall ther own; how hard it shalbe for the French King to continue any navie upon the sees, being alwayes in suche daunger for want of portes, yf any storme arrise; that We, without any our charge, shall at all tymes be hable not only to victuall our peeces, but to annoy also them at our pleasure. Which thinges We do but touche unto you, whom We know, for your experience in our affayres, to be so well acquainted with every parte therof, as you may set furthe the same at full unto the said Commissioners, and withall to tell them, that, lyke as We do know their doinges in Almayn, Italy, and every where, so have We, and mynd by the grace almighty of God, to provide accordingly. And, that notwithstanding, bothe for Goddes sake, and in respect of the wealth of Christendom, and for that olde hartie good will, that of long tyme hath betwene Us and their maister, We shalbe right glad that peax be concluded, and our olde amitie and frendship renued agayn, so as they will abandon their will, make frendly and round offers, and in the debating therof consider that reason and indifferency wold We shuld have no lesse respect to our honour then their maister hath to his. And here you may touche agayn to them thunreasonablenes of their request to have Bulloyn, which We have royally conquered in our just warres. They neither have used so to leave any pece won by them in their warres, as may appere by Hesding and Piemont, nor in our first warres with them the keaping of Turnay and Turwayn was any let to the conclusion of a peax at that tyme.

As for the matters of your instructions, albeit We thinke that the same be alredy for theeffect therof so qualified, especially for the fyrst, as, yf they mynd to comme on bona fide, they ought in reason condisceund unto; yet, yf you shall se that franknes in them that Monluke pretendeth, forasmoche as it appereth by his talke with you, M^r Secretary, that besides the payment of our pension, they will be contented willingly to leave to our handes somme parte of Bullonoyes for our suertie of the payment of our arrerages charges and expenses; our pleasure is, that you shall travaill asmoche as ye may to cause them to declare what partes of Bullonoyes they will agree of their own good willes to leave unto us; and yf you shall se them comming toward any conformitie, then assaying first, whither you can bring them to be contented that all Bullonoyes, from the water a thisside Estaples, do remayn still in our handes, you shall in thende comme to this, that, ther nuc forte being rased, and left to us as a fissher town, We may have in our quiet possession all Bullonoyes from Hardelow, or att the lest from the ryver cummyng by Porthyll, by such lymittes and boundes as uppon vieu of the ground shall be thought mete, and accorded betwene yow and them.

And, where it seameth to you, our Secretary, by your conference with Monluke, that they will not comme to suche a somme to be payed for our costes and expenses, as is conteyned in your instructions, We shall be pleased to moderate the same, and to abate one million of the crownes, so as they will

assent that thole countie of Guysnes may quietly remayn to Us and our heyres for ever, wherby occasions of bogges and variaunces may well be taken away, and this amitie, which We wold have so made as the same might endure, have his continuance accordingly.

And for the better inducing of the French Commissioners to a conformitie in this point, you may remember unto them, how small a commoditie their maister hath at this present of the said countie of Guysnes, the profit wherof remayneth almost all to other men; so as, yf they mean a perfect and finall establissement of an amitie in deede, ther is no cause why they shuld in reason refuse tassent to the same.

In the setting furth of which thinges, and beating in to their heddes what advauntage We have presently over them, and thatt We have greate advauntages over them they doo know, how expedient and necessary the conclusion of this peax and amitie shall be for them; We require you to employ all your good dexterities; traveling also to beatt owt as nyer as ye may to whatt poyntes they wyll fynally grow; and advertising Us from tyme to tyme of all your procedinges, upon knowlege wherof We shall signifie our certayn pleasure further unto you as any occasion shall so require accordingly.

M^R PETER, with most harty commendacions. I send unto you herwith a short letter to the Kinges Majestie², thynkyng shortly to send unto you longer letters, and I trust conteynyng better matter then that was written from these quarters to day. But what remedy? All is for the best. And in dede we had not had the worst, if Sir Rafe Ellerker had not bene slayne³; God have mercy on his soule. But you see what cace we ar in, that ar enforced for the strength of horsemen to use straungers, the which at every tyme leave us in the durt, sumtyme thAlmayns and sumtyme the Albanoyes. I beseche God direct all thinges so, as for this tyme we leave to have nede of them, and against the next tyme to be able to have a gret force of our own horsemen, which wold be right well, if it shall herafre please His Majestie to gyve lyke wages to his own men that He gyvith to straungers, and so shuld His Majestie be sure to be well served; for they by that meane shuld both have abilite and courage to serve, wheras now they lack bothe. For with 9^d a day thorsemen, if his horse be kyllled, is not able to by another, and seyng a straunger have 3£ a monethe, and he but 20^s, his hart his kyllled. I know what can be sayd to the contrary, but yet ther is so moche to be sayd for the part that I speke for, tending to the Kinges Majesties honour and surety, as I am sure can not well be answered. But this is to be talked uppon for herafter; and for the present remedy a peax will do well, whiche we will bring from hens, if you send it furst from thens; for nemo ascendit ad celos, nisi qui descendit de celis. If we have a peax now, we shalbe the abler herafter, if nede be, to make warre. And if you say that the enemye is now farr behynd the hand, it is trew, and we be nothing aforhand. And if you say that he shall by a peax wax stronger and richer, I cannot agre to that; but I am sure we shall wax stronger and richer, and I beleve he shalbe weker; for that I suppose he will strait match hym self with a fresh enemye. But all shalbe as God will, and what soever He sendyth is for the best. Thus I byd you most hartely well to fare. From Cales, the 28th of Apryll late in the nyght, 1546.

² In this letter Paget informed the King that he had received a letter from Monluc, advising him that Annebaut had arrived at Montreuil, and desired a safe-conduct for himself and his train from thence to Arde; another after his coming to Arde for three or four vivandiers to resort to St. Omer for poultry and such acates; another for four or five post-horses to lie at Daverne for speedy passage to the Court; and a licence for three or four tuns of wine to be brought out of France for himself and his household: and that he (Paget) had sent the request to Hertford and Lisle for their consideration.

MCCCXLVII. LISLE, PAGET, and WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

IT may pleas Your moost excellent Majestic to be advertised, that this morning arryved here from thAdmiral of Fraunce Signor Francesco Bernardo with message unto us on the said Admirales behalf, that forasmocheas, in talke before of thAdmirales save conduit for his cumming to Ardre, we pretended sum doubt of the revictaillement of Ardre; under that colour, he thought it better not to cum to Ardre, onles we could be contented to think that (albeit bringing with him sum men of reputation in his cumpany, whom the King his maister had appoynted to waite uppon hym for his honour, reciting the President of Rowen, the Secretaire Bochetel, Messieurs Monluc and Spifan, besides divers others, though not men of Counsail, yet of no lesse estimation) he shuld for the furniture of him self, these men, and their traynes, be enforced for the scarcite both of lodging and provision at Ardre, to bring nyne or tenne cariages, besides his muletes, that he ment not therby to revictail Ardre; for it shuld touch his honour to moch, under such a colour, to work such a feate, and therefore in no wise he ment it. And if we can be contented so to take it, thenne will he cum to Ardre, oreles thinketh it better for himself to cum to Sanmer au Boys, and we to Boulloyn, and then he sayth to meet upon the frountier grounde of both places, thinking it necessary for both partes that an abstinence wer had in these quarters by lande for a 7 or 8 dayes during the tyme of our talke, within the which space he desyreth that the cause of our assembling may be determined. Wherunto, Sir, considering that Sanmer we say is Your Majesties, and that there is no frontiere betwene Sanmer and Boulloyn, but all Your Majesties, if upon the French Admirales desyre we shuld agree to meete upon any place as a place indifferent betwen them and us, we shuld prejudice Your Majesties affaires and our action, at the furst chop, chop, even to moch, we thought good to stande still with thAdmirales cumming to Ardre; and there upon we rest, with addition, that we will credite his honour for the not revictailling of Ardre under this colour. And the further, Sir, we think that thAdmiral of Fraunce, with such a cumpany, shall cum from home to meet with your Commissioners, the more shalbe Your Majesties honour and the gretter apparence to the woorlde of their desyre to this practique; which we think hath a long begynnyng, er we can meet; but we pray God sende it a good ending when we departe. As touching thabstinence, which he propounded, eyther forcluding or not forcluding eny victailling on both sydes, we sayd we could say nothing, until we had herd advise from Your Majestie, wherin we sayd we woold write with diligence; and so we besече Your Majestie tadvertise us of your pleasure in that behalf; not doubting but Your Majestie wil, of your high wisdom, consydre, in cace your pleasure be tagre to an abstinence, wheder forclosing of victailling shalbe expedyent for Your Majesties affayres, having so many mouthes to feede as Your Majestie hath: I dare saye above 20000 at the leest, men of warre. We looke for Monluc to be here anon. In cace he cum not before the passage, Your Majestie shalbe advertised of his doinges by the next. We think it be only to salute me, thAdmyral, and to commun with us for the daye and place of our meeting; for we suppose he will not entre the mater with us, for that resolute aunswer was signified unto him of late, eftsones desyring to speke with me, thAdmyral, that it was thought nother necessary for thaffayre, nor convenable for Your Majesties Admyral, cumming onely to treatate with thAdmyral of Fraunce, that I shuld treatate with any other person then with the sayd Admyral.

Even as we had written thus farre, cummith Monluc, and, as we gessed bifore, so is his errand, to knowe for the savetye of thAdmyralles meting with us, purposing eftsones, that an abstinence for nyn or ten dayes shuld be necessary for our quiet communication, and prejudiciall to neyther Princes affayres, and in the meane tyme, whiles he and his trayn shall passe, bicaus they cannot passe in a daye, but that sum shall go bifore, and sum cum after him, eyther with mulet, meet, cariage, or drink, or sum other thing, he desyreth, besides our saufconduit, that our men of warre may have commaundement not to medle wher he and his trayn shall passe, like as their men of warre shall be restrayned to cum nere any Your Majesties places; for otherwise he sayth, he and his trayn shall not passe in savetye, onles every man had a saufconduit to shewe. Wherunto, thinkeng Your Majestie will of your goodnes accept the same in gracious parte, we have by commyn consent written to my Lorde of Hertforde to gyve order for the French Admyralles satisfaction in that behalf; so as we think that to morow or upon Sondag he wilbe at Ardre, and that upon Monday we shall meet at the place we met last with thother Commissioners; trustyng that by that tyme we shall here agayn from Your Majestye of your pleasure touching the sayd abstinence. And thus we beseeche God to sende Your Majestie moost prosperously and long to reign. From Calays, the last of April, 1546.¹

To the Kinges moost excellent Majestye.

MCCCXLVIII. PAGET to KING HENRY VIII.²

PLEASITH Your most excellent Majestie to be advertised, that this nyght arryved here Francisco, Your Highnes currou, from Venyce, with a gret sort of letters to Your Majestie and me from Your Majesties Ambassadour at Venyce, and other your capitayns in Italy. The secret matter toching the capitains (for whose cause Francisco was sent to Venyce) may appere to Your Majestie in M^r Harvels letter to me.³ And as for the multitude of other letters both from Loys Gonzaga (toching whose pryncipal matter M^r Harvel writith to Your Majestie, and Lodovico de Larmi sendith a special messenger with the same) and from the rest of the capitains and others, they be only letters of office; saving that wheras I gave advise to De Larmi, at his depart-

² Holograph.

³ This letter from Harvel has not been found. By one from him to Paget, dated on the 24th of April, it appears that Francis the courier left Venice on the preceding day, and probably was the bearer of letters to Paget from John Kell, Giovanne Andrea Bromo, Angelo Mariano, Marco Antonio Palavicino, Bernardo da Santo Bonifacio, and Philipppo Pini, dated on the 22d and 23d, all remaining in the State Paper Office. The letter from Loys Gonzaga does not appear.

ing, bycause I supposed (as in dede it happened) the capitains woold resort to hym for knowledge of Your Majesties pleasure for theyr service, that he shuld requyre them, beyng allredy your pensioners, to be them selves in arredines to serve, and also to inquire of them secretly, (bycause therby they myght be entised the rather to blow it abroad) wheder they wer able uppon soden warnyng from Your Majestie, to provide so many men of warre as they have bownden themselves to do, when Your Majestie shuld call for them; and further to pray them, eche capitain apart, without knoweledge of another, to declare his opinion by what wayes and meanes and with what number he thynkyth Your Majesties enemyes myght be anoyed in the quarters of Italy, every of the sayd capitains writeth his opinion in that behaulf, as by theyr severall letters may appere, tending moche to one effect. Which maner of practise I used, uppon trust Your Majestie woold not be offended withall, for that therby Your Majestie beyng put to no peny charge, your enemy by the same occasion myght (as I am sure Your Majestie hath herd he hath alredy) be put to gretter charges uppon Italy side; considering that the more he spendith, and Your Majestie the lesse, the weker he is, and that uppon brutes Prynces do often tymes make gret expenses, experience techith daily. If it shall lyke Your Majestie to be put in remembraunce of Franciscos goyng to Venyce, M^r Harveles letter remaynyth among the other letters in M^r Peters keping, sealed with my seale, bycause your pleasure was to have it kept secret. It is in the pacquet of Harveles letters of Marche or February.

And forasmoche as, Sir, when we shall cum (in the treaty of our commission here) to the matter of the Scottes, among other thinges one is specially to be considered, I thought good to put Your Majestie in remembraunce therof; and that is, wheder You may comprehend the Scottes without thEmperours consent, or no? Of one thing I am remembred, which in my folish opinion (if this latter eclarysment have not taken it awaye) may declare as gret a liberty gyven Your Majestie to agre with the Scottes, as thEmperour had of Your Majestie (though it had bene treue that dArras sayd) to agree with the Frenchmen. For at my beyng last with thEmperour (wherof also I canne put M^r Wootton in remembraunce), when David Panter¹ was there also suyng for peax, the matter was broken unto us, and sayd by the Regent in the presence of thEmperours Counsail, that they had no cause of enemytye with Scotland, but for Your Majesties sake, and therfor remitted the matter holy to Your Majestie to have them ordred for peax or warre, as Your Majestie pleased. Howbeit, Sir, the matter tohith thEmperour so litle, and thenemytic betwene his Lowe Cuntreys and the Scottes is so favorable and frendly (for at Camphire, Mydilburg, Flushing, and diverse others places therabouts, they haunt as moche and boldly, as if it wer peax), that I think He will easely condescend to the same. Most humbly beseching Your Majestie, in the meane tyme, to signifie Your Highnes pleasure for our procedinges in this behaulf¹, and also wheder it shall lyke Your Majestie in the comprehension of the Scottes, to have regard to thErle of Lynoux restitution, and his brothers, to theyr landes and possessions in Scotland, leving to make any mencion (as if it shall please Your Majestie to licence me now, as You have done many tymes, to say my folish opinion, I thynk You may without any diminishing by silence of his pretended title) of the querel betwene the Governour and hym for the right of succession. Which maner of passing the same in silence servith also for Your Majesties turne; for I trust one day to se Your Majestie set them both besides the cushyn.

It may lyke Your Majestie also to signifie your pleasure, wheder we shall

¹ In a separate letter of the same date Paget sent to Petre "a schedule conteynyng the substance in articles of the purposes we meane to descend unto, after persuasion first made to the Frenchmen to let Bulleyn to us without further clayme," and desired to have a letter either from the King or the Council with "His Majesties contentations uppon the same poyntes." The schedule runs thus:

"The Frenche King and his heires to paye yerely suche pentiones and other somes of money to the Kinges Majeste and his heires at suche dayes termes and places and in suche manner and forme as by his former treatyes He and they ar bounden to pay to the Kinges Majeste and his heires, and for the assured payment thereof, if anny thing be undone, to cause all suche things to be done and perfaited, whiche by the former treatyes wythe the Kings Majeste the French King ought to have caused to be done and perfaited.

"Tharrerages to be payed all in hand, or the halff, and the rest at dayes, according to our instructions; and, untill we have the certayne knowledge of tharrerage out of England, in the meane tyme we aske the more and dryve them to shewe one acquitaunce for the last payment.

"Thexpense in the warre to be repayed to the Kings Majeste, or suche somme as we can agree uppon, being not under the some prescribed in our instructions.

"All the forsayd somes allredy due, and whiche shalbe due at and betwene this and the dayes of payement, where upon we agre for the payment of the expense being payd at suche place and tymes as we agre on, and the rest of the covenantes kept in the meane season, then we to rendre agayne Bulloyn wythe the hole County of Bulloynoys, and in the meane tyme we to enjoye quietly and wythe out anny theyr let, enpechement, dole, fraude, or mal engyn to the contrary, Bulloyn wythe the hole Countye of Bulloynoys.

"The Scottes to be comprehendyd in suche sort, as they were by the last treaty betwene the Kinges Majestie and Fraunce, and so as they delyver out of hand theyr yong Quene to the Kinges Majestie, to be marryed to my Lorde Prince, and kepe the rest of theyr covenant wythe the Kinges Majestie toching the mariage; or, not delyvering the Quene in hand, put in suche hostages, as His Majeste will require, for performauce of thole treaty of mariage."

agree (if the Frenchmen requyre it) to the renovation of thold treatyes with them, as I cannot see how we can do otherwise, for that the pension must be payd by vertue of the same, adding such a speciall clause of reservation of your treaty with thEmperour, as He did for Your Majestie in his treaty with Fraunce; the cotype wherof it may please Your Majestie to commaunde to be sent unto us.

My Lord of Hertford sent to me even now to write to Your Majestie for money, wherof they have nede in the camp, and the want therof will hyndre and protract moche Your Majesties workes there, as may appere by the contrary, with what courage the souldiours, havng money, have brought up in so litle a tyme such a wonderfull pece of worke.

Thus havng nothing eles to write to Your most excellent Majestie, I beseeche Almyghty God, as I do every daye uppon my knees, to send You the victory evermore of all your enemyes, and evermore most prosperously and long to reign over us. From Calais, the furst of May, 1546.

MCCCLI. LISLE, PAGET, and WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.¹

It may pleas Your moost excellent Majestie to be advertised, that this daye the French Commissioners, viz^t thAdmyral, the President Raymond, and the Secretary Bochetel, and we, met in a tent upon the same ground where the last meting was, about elleven of the clock at noon, and contynued to giders until six at night. After our meeting (wherin was sum difficultye used, for

that the daye being until evening very fowle, thAdmyral woold have had us have cum to talke at Ardre, and we him to talke at Guisnes) furst a certayne general proposition was used on their part of the cause of our assemblee, and request made, that forasmoch as being (as they trusted we wer like to themselves) fully enstructed of Your Majesties mind, and that the poinctes wer well knowen to both partes wherupon the sticking was made, as thinges often debated heretofore, we woold therfor for our part descend to the substance of the mater, and they woold do the same; prayng us that without long disputes or any maner woordes of dishonestye or reproche, the mater might be communicated on both sydes. Aunswer was made, that we woold speke nothing, but that shuld be fitting and to the purpose; true we sayd it was, that we wer sent to meet them as men wel disposed to a peax, if we shuld fynde them the semblables, and as conformable to reason as they shuld fynd us, and we trusted that if they sawe we spake reason, and yet could not assent furthwith thereto, for that their commission or instruction led them not so far, yet they woold play the part of good ministres, and travail with their maister to induce Him tunderstande the same. "And, forbicaus" (quod we) "you desyre
 " to have us to cum to the poinctes and pith of the mater roundely, youe
 " ar not ignorant upon what occasion this warre beganne, and that you gave " us just cause to entre the same. We could here speke of our old quereles
 " against youe, but for this tyme we let passe over in silence, and descende
 " to the not payment of our pension, which youe ar bounde to paye to the " Kinges Majestie, whereby, and for your unkindnes to the Kinges Majestie
 " our maister, you provoked the same to entre the warre, to his exceding gret
 " charges and despence. Paye unto us out of hande that which shall appere
 " by the treatyes that youe owe, contynue the payment of the pension as the " same treatyes requyre, gyve us sum reasonable recompence towardes our " charges, which hath stand the Kinges Majestie in above eight millions, and " let us alone with Boulloyn and Boullonnoys; and this mater shalbe shortly " determined." "This is not the waye to treate," quod they, and smiled, "for " this song hath been song often tymes, as you knowe. We pray you to " cum more roundely to us to worke. The keeping from us of Boulloyn is " the cause of the contynuaunce of this warre; and onles you can be con" tented to treate upon sum meane for the restitution unto us again of " Boulloyn, and that the Scottes, our auncient freendes, may be comprehended,
 " both you and we have lost moch labour. Wherfor, if you have not com" mission to devise with us in this behalf, both we and you ar moch abused."
 "Why," quod we, "ar you so desyrous to have Boulloyn again?" "O," quod they, "for the losse of it toucheth our honour so moch, as without " meanes

“meanes to have that agayn we shall never be at peax.” “You have made “peax,” quod we, “er this tyme, both with us and with others, forgoing sum “peces of yours, which was wonne from youe in the warre, reckening Heding, “Tourney, Millan, and sundry other places which thEmpereur kepeth, which “wer thinges appertenaunt to your croun; and yet you have not made so “gret a mater of it.” “Asfor Tourney,” quod they, “we had hope to have it “again for money, and so we had upon promise of 600000 crownes, and kept “it til you help to wynne it from us again. And as for such peces as the “Empereur kepeth from us, He kepeth them perforce, and we kepe sum of “his; wherefor our honour is therin preserved; and yet, for that He kepeth “them from us, we have ben in the warre with Him and his auncesters “almoost these thirty yeres; and to saye that the King our maister will, with “his good will, loose one foote of his grounde, we assure you that He will “rather consume the rest of his realme. This warre,” quod they, “betwen
 “our maisters hath been rather for the preservation of their honours, thenne “for any ennemitye betwen their personnes.” And here at length was repeted thentrevieu of Your Majestie and the French King here at Guisnes, and what kindnes had ben shewed on both sydes, and what a gracious dede it wer to make You frendes agayn, what damages their cuntrey and peple had suffred by this warre, and that Your Majestie went not all scott free; prayng us to helpe that the maters might be honorable compounded. “And, to cum to the “poinctes,” they sayd, “furst, looke what, shuld appere by writting that was “due, shuld be payd, remitting that” (they sayd) “to the papers to be “judges,” they woold also accord again to the payment of the pension viager and perpetuel, according to the former treatyes. And, if Your Majestie woold rendre to them agayn Boulloyn, they had commission to present unto Your Majestie 100000 crownes or 150000 or 200000 crownes; and that was all they had commission to promise. And as for the Scottes, they sayd wer their frendes, and without the comprehension of them their honour wer to moch touched, for they might not abandon them, being their old frendes and thone half of themselves, and if they shuld, having stand alwayes so frendly to them, both we and all woorld might judge them much dishonorable. And here (after we had sumwhat sayd of thamitye, which Your Majestie bare heretofore to theyr maister, and what great kindnes You had shewed to Him, whenne He had nede of frendeshipp, which He agayn forgat, and enforced Your Majestie to the gret charges and expenses You have borne in this warre) we sayd that, whensoever there is due to any man a somme of money, wherof he cannot be payed, his remedy is an action at lawe, wherby having just mater and condemnyng his parte adverse in the principall, he doth alwayes (and reason so wouold) recover his costes, or at the leest a great pece of it; for otherwise no man welnere wouold care for the payment of his debt, if he sawe that er he wer dryven to paye the same, his creditour shuld be enforced to spend tenne tymes asmoch as the principall: and this wer the next waye to make every man rather loose his debt, then to sue for the same. "Mary," quod we, "you speke of an example to pernicious and daungerous. The " King your maister ought ours a good debt, which you cannot deny; and, " forbicaus He could not be payd therof, He was fayne to entre that action for " the recovery therof, which Princes comonly use, and have non other; which " was the swoorde. In the pursute of which action He had expended well 8 " millions of gold;" so as of right Your Majestie ought to have that for your costes and expenses, and kepe nevertheles that which You have conquered: and yet, to thintent they may know that Your Majestie is desyrous to renew your old amitye with their maister, we bad them paye out of hande all that shall appere due alredey, contynue the pensions as aforsayde, and paye 8 millions in recompence of costes and charges, and thenne shuld they have their desyre of Boulloyn; and yet for the payment of 8 millions we wouold agree to reasonable termes. And as for the Scottes, we saw no cause why they shuld so earnestly requyre their comprehension, nor that by leaving them out of this treatye their honour shuld be more touched thenne it was by their last leaving them out, at theyr peax making with thEmpercur. "Eight millions!" quod they. "You speke merily: all Christendom have not so moch money. We " may aswel offre you agayn 100 crownes. You speke of recompence," quod they; "if any recompence shuld be made, we shuld have it, for you have " made us spende twyse asmoch as you, and also delivred to thEmpercur the " Marquisate of Mountferrate, Lucemburgh, Yvoy, Landersey, and divers " other places; which, had not ben for youe, we had kept still. And, where " you saye," quod they, "we gave you the cause of the warre, we do deny " that the pension was ever asked us, and say that you brake the treatye " first, for that you gave not ayde, being asked, according to the treatye." And here, after that both they and we had long disputed the treatyes, with the proceedinges of thAmbassadors on both sydes at that tyme (wherof Your Majestie hath dyvers tymes herd heretofore), we sayd that Your Majestie had put them to no charges, but that You might laufully do for lack of payment. And as for the places, the surrendring wherof they imputed to Your Majestie, we sayd that it was not Your Majestie which caused them to do it, but their hope to have Millan again brought them to it. And as for Your Majesties expenses, expenses, they wer only the cause of it, and the mater went not as they sayd. For furst, where as they alledge the non observaunce of our treaty, that we denyed; and though in dede we had not observed, yet was that no just cause, why they shuld deteyn the money due, for the debt was simple upon plain obligations, not upon this nor that condition, but growen upon certayn other causes, as apperith in the treatye. To gyve this ayde or that ayde, was not the suggestion of the debt, but for thinges alredy passed. And as for thasking of it, we sayd sum of us could depose that it was asked. And as touching the Scottes, they nede to make such sticking for leaving them out at this tyme, seyng they wer left out so franckly in their treaty with thEmperour. "That is not so," quod thAdmiral, "they wer comprehended." "That is not so," quod we, "the treaty will declare the contrary." "No," (quod he) "by the woordes of the treatye they be not comprehended, but by promesse they ar." "That is not so" (quod we); "for, whenne this last yere David Panter cam into Flaunders there it appered well they wer not comprehended:" (and so repeted at length all the procedinges at that tyme by the Regent and thEmperours Counsaill, with such as wer there then for Your Majestye). Wherunto thAdmirall sayd, that both the Viceroy and Granvelle had convenaunted with him, that they shuld be comprehended; mary they desyred for certain respectes, that it shuld be forborne for a tyme to be mentioned in the treatye, saing that thEmperour sayd He woold not counsaill their maister to leave the Scottes unprovided, nor that it wer his honour so to do. "And this," quod thAdmyral, "the Viceroy I am sure will not deny, nor Granvela nother. What Granvele is, you know," (quod he) "but asfor the Viceroy, I take him for so honest a man, that he will not deny this, and if he will, I will avowe it to him to his displeasure." "But you woold be loth" (quod we) "that this shuld be rehersed upon your mouth." "Nay," quod he, "say hardely that I sayd it." "Yea, mary," (quod Monluc, who stode by) "thEmperour sayd to me, at my last being with Him, that He is not in warre with the Scottes." "Well," (quod we) "his dedes shew the contrary." "Never a whit," quod they, "for the Scottes haunt his cuntrey familiarly, and his subgettes the Scottes." "Yea, sum," quod we, "upon saveconduit." "A goodly colour" (quod they.) "Nay surely if we shall leave the Scottes at random," quod they, "you might well think us worthy to have no frendship, nother of youe nor any others:" and here they set furth at length the gret and long amitye of the Scottes towards them, and what beastes they wer worthy to be counted, if they shuld abandon them. "If you desyre so moch," quod we, "that the Kinges Majestic shuld have “ regard to your honour in the twoo poinctes, viz^t for the restitution of “ Boulloyn, and the comprehension of the Scottes, thenne muste you be con“ tented to have regard to his honour also. And for the mater of the “ Scottes, let the yong Quene be delivred, and hostages gyven for the “ performaunce of the rest of the treatye with them of mariage.” And here we had a long debate to gidres touching the delivering of her Personne, being so yong, out of her mothers handes, and the marying of Her against her will ;

 and so at length cam to aske such hostages, as Your Majestie woold demaunde for the performaunce of the treatye. And here they began to entre devises, wheruppon by all likelyhode they had thought before, and desyred us to write unto Your Majestie. It was aunswered, this mater touched Your Majesties honour more thenne Boulloyn touched them, and that we thought it in no wise meet, in our own consciences, to give advise to their comprehension without that treaty wer observed. They prayed us yet to think upon them. And this night they promised, after our departing, to send them to us in writting ; which if they do, we have thought good to sende them unto Your Majestie.
 As touching the somme for the recompence ; we sayd we wer contented to descende to six millions, and if they thought we asked to moch, we badde them offre a reasonable recompence in theyr opinion. “ It was never seen,” quod they, “ that recompence was asked before for expenses. And as for that “ you alledge, without recompence thexample wer daungerous for all credi-“ tours, you have wel scourged us, for that your money was not payd ; you “ have slayn our people, and divasted our cuntrey, and also compelled us to “ paye our debt, which is a sufficient payn for non payment, and a gret “ honour to your maister.” “ And have we lost non,” (quod we) “ nor suffred “ any dommage ? And we aske it not alone for thexpenses, but also for a “ reciprocq of that you desyre to be restored to youe. What is 200000 “ crownes ?” quod we. “ It is scant the raunsom of you, Mons^r lAdmyrall, “ if you shuld be taken prisoner.” And hereat he laughed, alledging his inhabilite : “ But ” (quod he) “ we have shewed youe our commission, and “ therefor we pray youe let us here, to what point you will descende in that “ mater.” And so we cam roundely to the thre millions. “ You have ”
 (quod they) “ Boulloyn prisoner, and you aske thre millions, when that “ thEmpercur had but twoo millions for the King, when He was prisoner ; and “ yet all Fraunce with the helpe of his freendes wer not able, but with moch “ adoo, to pay it.” “ In good faith,” quod we, “ and lower can not we cum.”
 “ Why thenne,” quod they, “ let us never spende more tyme about the mater.
 “ We woold we had never entred so farre therin, and that, ere both you and “ we

“ we had cum from the Courtes of our maisters, that these thinges had ben “ furst brought to better furtheraunce then I see they ar at yet : and so I “ desyred, but you sent woord again, that it wer better our maisters shuld “ sende personnages of credit to talke in few woordes therof, and to make an “ ende shortly.” “ We thought ” (quod we) “ that you woold have satisfyed
 “ the Kinges our maisters honour, in asmoch as He woold be content to cum “ to talke of that you desired ; to the which He never cam hitherto, nor will “ hereafter, if we breke of now : and therefor let us here thextremite of your “ commission for this offre.” “ 200000 crownes is our commission,” quod thAdmyrall, “ but if I offre fifty thousande or such a thing more, I am sure “ my maister will stande to it.” “ We ar sorye,” quod we, “ to signifye this
 “ to our maister ; but what remedye, if you will non other ? For Tournay
 “ you gave 600000, and in faith the having agayn of this to you is worth 6 “ Tournays, and the leaving of it importeth no lesse to us.” “ No,” quod they, “ but you consydre not, that thenne we had nothing to paye, whereas “ now you must have a gret somme for tharrerage.” And here we toke occasion to speke of thobligation ; which they deny, and stand in it, not to have forfaited it, and after long dispute thende was our “ yea ” and their “ nay ; ” they adding that we remembre not how for the restitution of Boulloyn they ar content to gyve the pension viager and perpetuel ; which, if they have not Boulloyn, and the warres contynuyng, we cannot have. We aunswered that those thinges wer due for an other respect. “ But being in ennemity, all “ former respectes ” quod they, “ be taken awaye. If you take not peax with “ us,” quod they, “ you loose 100000 yerly pension, you loose all your debt, “ and whatsoever you shall have in recompence ; besides the perpetuel chardge “ that Boulloyn shall, for the keping, put you yerely to.” And after this sort disputing this mater to and fro, we agreed at last eche part tadvertise his maister of the state of the mater, and to what poinctes we wer descended, with promise at our next meting cyther part of us to bring his maisters resolute aunswer in all thinges. Which meeting we have promised shalbe within these fyve dayes ; for otherwise thAdmyral woold have broken of at this present.
 Wherunto in good faith, seing their procedinges so megre, we could well have been contented to have agreed, if we had knowen Your Majestie woold not have been offended with all. We proponed also the maner and dayes of payment of that, which shuld be agreed upon, and likewise for the detention of Boulloyn and Boullonnoys in the meane tyme, according to tharticles which wer sent to Your Majestie.

And in fyne, Sir, bicaus your pleasure was, that we shuld grope out of them,

them, as nere as we could, to what poinetes they will descende; if it shall pleas You to here our conjectures upon such talkes as have now passed with them; we suppose they will pay yerly your pension; for your expenses peradventure 500 or 600000 crownes, and that wilbe the moost, if they cum to that; item, tharrerages of your pension; and paying these two somes at one tyme to be agreed uppon, be contented that in the meane tyme You shall kepe Boulloyn, and we suppose all on thisside the water: and that wilbe the moost, if they may be brought to that. And asfor the Scottes, they mynde to patche up sum blinde convenaunt for them, as may appere by theyr overtures.

Francesco Bernardo hath appointed to speke with thAdmyrall apart to morowe, and will see, as of himself, wheder they will gyve two millions and a half, or if he can, thre millions in the holle, and have eight or tenne yeres day of payment. He asked wheder we woold be contented he shuld assaye thAdmyrall as of himself. We aunswered he might do what he woold, we nother woold bidde him, nor forbidde him; but as for us, we minded not to medle, til we herd agayn from Your Majestie. Beseching Your Majestye that it may like you to lett us knowe Your Highnes finall pleasure in every thing, for they looke for it, and after the next meting we ar like to talke no more togiders, onles we do agre better then we have don at this tyme. Sir, we know that we ar not so well able to serve Your Majestic, as the weight of this affayre requyreth; but we trust that, likeas, if an honorable peax do folowe, the thanks therof ar to be imputed to your gret wisdom, so, if the warre do contynue, Your Majestic will of your moost gret goodnes interprete our meaning and good will to serve Your Highnes in gracious sort, and impute the fault to the stowt wilfulnes of your enemy. And thus we besech God to sende Your Majestic moost prosperously and long to reign. From Guisnez, the 6th of May, at mydnyght.

Not having received, at the finishing of this letter, theyr overtures touching the Scottes, we have thought best to sende these awaye in the meane season, and thothers after, if they do sende them.

Your Majesties

Moost humble faithful and moost bounden

subjectes, servauntes, and dayly Oratours,

MCCCLII. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to PAGET.¹

AFTER our most hartly commendations. The Kinges Majeste having seen your letters of the fyrst of May, and being also advertised of tharticles sent from yow to me², Sir William Petre, hath, for awnswar to the same, commaundyd us to signefye unto yow that His Majeste lyketh very well tharticles which yow sent hither, and is pleased thatt according to the tenour of your own letters, if yow shall nott bee hable to perswad them to leave Bulloyn and Bullonoyze to His Majeste and his heyres for ever withowt furthar clayme, thatt then yow shall descend to your sayd articles, the copies wherof we return unto yow herewith: and, if yow can nott bring them tassent to thes articles, then to proceed furthar according to thinstruction delyveryd yow here, and such furthar instruction as sythens thatt tyme hath byn sent by His Majesties commawndment unto yow.

Mary, touching the comprehension of the Scottes, His Highnes wold yow shuld att the fyrst make some stay theratt, saying thatt they be commen enemyes to His Highnes and thEmperour also, and thatt His Majeste may not comprehend them withowt thexpresse consent of thEmperour. And His Highnes wold, thatt yow shuld use all your good dexterites to perswad the French Commissioners in this poynt to make the peax withowt any mention of the Scottes. Butt if in fyne yow shall nott bee hable to induce them to any such agreement, His Highnes is pleased yow shall proceed according to the tenour of your article, and your formar instruction: and yett, for avoyding of all other quarels thatt may arrise, His Highnes thinketh expedient thatt in thend of thatt article yow doo qualefye your agreement touching the comprehension of the Scottes, so as thEmperour shall assent unto the same.

Wee have communed with my Lord of Wynchester concerning tharrerages of the pension, who having hadd long and often debating of thatt mater, showeth us thatt the pension is due and onpayd for 12 yeres, and thatt, besides tharrerages of the pension, ther is due unto His Majeste by an allegation 500000 crownes. For the better openyng of which mater of tharrerages, His Majeste lyketh the way, thatt your self hath wryten hithar, viz^t to demawnd inough; requyring them to shew ther last acquyetaunce; which thing as they may nott refuse with reason, being the prove of His Majestes debt so manifest as it is, so wee think this the best way to bring yow to an apparent certaynte of the same.

MCCCLIII. PAGET to PETRE.¹

M^R PETER, with most harty commendacions. I send unto you the Frenchmens overtures touching the Scottes², wherof mencion was made in our last commyn letters, which we myght kepe well inowgh here I beleve, onles the Frenchemen and we cum nerer, at our next meting, toching the rest of the poyntes, then we did at this furst tyme. They have sent Monluc to the French King (thAdmyrall sent woord to day to us) fully instructed of all thinges; at whose returne they looke for a resolut and final answer in every poynt. We trust it shall lyke the Kinges Majestic to signifie lykewise His Highnes pleasure to us accordingly. Touching the 512000 crownes, which my Lord of Wynchestre sayth is due, these be the woordes of the French Kinges letter, wherby He sayth the same is due: "Si nos" (sayth the French King) "aut successores nostri dictum tractatum perpetuæ pacis juxta conventiona in eodem non observaverimus, vel non observarint" &c. as folowyth in lok uppon the wordes of the treaty. the letter ; which they say they have not broken, for they wer never requyred debito modo to do any thing which the treaty byndyth them to do, and therfor the some cannot be demaunded. And though, they say, it fortune a man not to kepe the condicion of his obligation, yet it is against conscience to aske the peyn of thobligacion, and an extremite, when he is redy to fulfill the condicion. For the prove of the debt theyr shall lacke nothing to be sayd, that can be devised by us in any maner wise. But what shall reason serve, if will shall fortune to rule, in suche a personage as the French King is ; Who, if He myght be brought to a judgement, myght also sone be brought to reason. I pray God to gyve Hym grace both for his own benefit and ours, to send a reasonable determination to his Commissioners in this matter.

By a letter lately sent to me from my Lord Lieutenaunt, you shall perceyve in thende his aunswer tooching your request. I did asmoche with hym in it, as I could have done in myn own. ThAdmyrall hath sent to have me and M^r Wootton to cum tomorow to Ardre to dyner, promising that the President Raymond shall cum hither to supper and lye here all nyght with us. ThAdmyral also hath sent to my Lord Admyral to go togidres a hunting of thare ; but we esteme not theyse Frenche curtoyses. We woold rather wish them to do, as they ought to do in other matters, which they ar bownd to do ; lesse of theyr curtoysy, and more of theyr money. I could, I promise you, rather fynd in my hart to fyght with them, then to bankyt with them ; and I promise you, if we do not agre now (as I doubt it moche, onles the Kinges Majestie yeld more, then they yeld yet), I will never, with my good will, (the Kinges favour and commaundement excepted) open my lippes, neque sursum neque deorsum, for peax. Let God work His will. For with my prayer to God, with my wit, my mynd, my hart, and body, I have travailed in the world as moche as ever poore man did, bothe for christen charites sake, for my dewty to my Soverayn Lord and maister, and for my love to my cuntrey ; and all in vayn. For myn own ease or commodite I never cared, God is my judge, one jote for it. I have desyred it, for the quyetnes of my maister, Who, I woold be the soryest man lyving, shuld take any inwarde care or depe thought, and for the quietnes of my poore cuntrey men, to whom I am bownd in nature as I am in native conscience ; and, for his exceding and wonderful kyndnes and gentlenes to me at all tymes, sithens I was his man, most bownden to His most excellent Majestie. Praying God (if a synful mans prayer may be herd in any thing) to blesse Hym ever more, and to send you aswell to do, as I woold my self. From Guysnes, the 7th of May, 1546.

I sende you here inclosed a letter from Skipper unto me, wherein I pray you help for his satisfaction, so as neyther the Kinges Majesties service be hindred thereby, nor our ennemyes avaunced. Upon such aunswer, as the French Admyral sent this day unto my Lord Admyrall, wherein I doubt not his Lordship writteth to the Kinges Majestic presently, he remayneth stil here for the execution of his charge committed unto him in this treatye¹, onles the Kinges Majestic shall hereafter signifye his pleasure to the contrary; as we suppose here His Majestic will not, consydering his entry alredy in to the mater, and the French Admiralles aunswer, with that the mater is like to be shortly determined upon such aunswers, as both the partes looke to have by the next letters from bothe our maisters.

MCCCLIV. PAGET to PETRE.²

M^R PETER, after my most harty commendacions. By your letters of the 6th of this present I perceyve you have receyved my sundry letters, and shewed the same to the Kinges Majestic; and do gather by that is put out and in your sayd letter, the Kinges Majestic shuld not take althing the best, myn so often mencionyng of peax in my letter, willing you to write to me specially to have respect to our treaty. M^r Peter, no man lyving takyth so moche care, ¹ Lisle appears to have received advice from the Council that sixty French ships had sailed, and that he had better leave the negociation to Hertford, and take the command of the English fleet. Lisle sent a message to Annebaut by Monluc on this subject, and received an answer that the Admiral, upon his faith, knew of no such event, and was sure that no ships would sail without his knowledge. And the same day he received a letter from Lord William Howard (who had the command in the Downs) mentioning that he heard nothing of the French fleet, except from the Council; and Burley, who was the bearer of Howard's letter, had fallen in with a Flemish pink from Dieppe, who had heard nothing of the sailing of any ships, except two gallies towards Newhaven in Normandy (le Havre de Grace). For these reasons, which are explained in letters from Lisle to the Privy Council on the 6th, and to the King and Petre on the 7th of May, he determined to remain at Calais.

as I do, for the avoyding of every maner a thing, which myght offend His Majestie, not for any servile feare (for theyr is non in me), but for the singuler love and entyer affection, which God, my conscience, and honesty have graffed and nourished in my hart, to my Soverayn and most benign and gentle maister. Asfor peax, when I remembre that God is thauthor of it, ye, peax it self, and that Christ praised alwayes peacible men all the tyme of His beyng among men visibly, and at His departing from them recommended most specially peax; I cannot but praise peax, desyre peax, and helpe to my power thavauncement of peax. And, albeit I know I am not the wisest man, yet for that knoweledge I have gotten by so often heryng so wise a maister as myn is, and having had the frequent conversation of so wise a cumpany as I have haunted now well nere 6 yeres, besides myn exersise 10 yeres togidres before that in His Majesties service; I see, and so doth all His Majesties Counsail, as both I and you have herd them say, when they ar togiders, the contynuaunce of the warre, for the charge therof so incertain, the wayes and meanes for the relief therof so strait, and at such at ebbe, and thende in this cace of the warre so daungerous, as my hart bledith in my body, when I think of it. Ye, Mr Peter, and now writing of it, my body trembleth, and myn eyes water. Wherfor? For my self? No, No! Mr Peter. I thank God of His grace I know my self, my lief, my deth, and what all other thinges in this world wayth, and what the value of them is. So as we had peax to the Kinges Majesties satisfaction, I wold gladly be sacrificed for it, if my deth myght helpe forward the matter. I pray you most humbly, on your knees, on my behaulf, to besече His Majestie, and, even now absent, I besече Hym, on my knees, to think that I will have asmoche respect to the treaty, and have had (what soever I write home to you, which ar my deere compaignon for the openyng of my hart, and to be shewed to His Majestic if you think it mete, as I think mete nothing to be kept from Hym, and I wold to Godes passion He myght see every mans hart, as wel as his face), as becummyth a good servaunt and a faythfull, to have for thavauncyng of his maisters desyre. And we have here shewed our selves so litle to desyre peax, onles we myght have as moche as our selves listed for our maister, as they with whom we treate wold have furthwith broken of and departed, and we, but for want of knoweledge of our maisters pleasure, wold have done the same, we did so litle esteme peax in the face of our enemye. Asfor theyr practise to wyne tyme, I see it not in them, what soever our cold frendes say. If they ment that they wold rather seke meanes for longer tyme, then to desyre to have ended the matter at our furst meting, and to determyn (as they do) but one meting more for a resolute answer on bothe partes; this is not, me thynkyth, no wayes to wyne tyme. No, no, Mr Peter; the French practises now a dayes be but bare geare to other mens practises. When they list to lye, they lye playnly; when they woold have a thing, they aske it playnly; when they woold not gyve a thing, they denye it playnly. The grete faulte in the Frenchman is, that reason never rulith, but when necessite constraynyth hym, more then his enemye; and then shall you have of hym what you will.

Asfor my Lord of Lynoux, you se, as well as I do, that by the last letter we wer not answered: this now shalbe observed accordingly. Asfor peax (as I wrote yesterday to you) if it cum not now, I will herafte kepe her secret in my hart, but speke of her hereafter woll I never, except when I shall be comaunded, and then will I (as I will evermore with all other thinges) follow (to the uttermost of my power) the Kinges Majesties most gracious pleasure, and shew my self alwayes a diligent ministre. And thus I byd you most hartely well to fare, and pray God to send you the same peax, which I thank God I have resting in myn hart and conscience. From Calais, the 8th of May, 1546, at nyght.

Y^oſ own PAGET.

I requyre you to rede this to His Majestie, and eles to kepe it to your self.

MCCCLV. KING HENRY VIII. to LISLE, PAGET, &c.¹

RIGHT trusty and right welbeloved cousyn, and trusty and right welbeloved, We grete you well. And late you wite that We have seen your letters of the 7th of this instant, and by the same do understand at good length your

proceedinges at this your first meting with the French Commissioners, whiche We take in good and thankefull parte towards you, nothing doubting (what so ever ther wilfulnes have byn, or shall be, of the contrary parte) you will employ all your diligens and good dexterities, to thuttermost of your powers, for thadvancement of our pleasure in all thinges according to the speciall trust We have reposed in you. For your better and more ample instruction wherin, you shall understand that, forasmoeche as the French Commissioners seme very desirous to have a resolute aunswer from you with somme expedition, and have alredy, (as they say) for the knowlege of their masters finall resolution, sent Monluke specially to the Frenche Courte, We have also thought good to signifie our pleasure unto you as followeth.

Fyrst, because in your last conference with them, they semed to esteeme Bulloyn, and that parte of Bullonoyes which We have justly conquered, to be a thing of suche small importance as 100000, or at the most 200000 crownes might countervayle the redemption of the same, and therfore did offer no more but 200000 crownes for the redemption of that town and other our landes; you shall declare unto them that, besides the great expenses don by Us upon the fortification and buylding of the said town sens the conquest therof, do declare to the worlde that We have an other estimation of it then they seme to have, We can be contented, in respect of the weall of Christendom, and for the good of peax, to graunte unto them a great deale more for the quiet keping of it, being alredy by all lawes our own, then they offer to departe withall for the redemption of the same; and wilbe pleased to remit to the French King all tharrerages, debtes, charges of the warre, and the recompence of the fortifications alredy don, so as the French King for Him and his successours will leave to Us and our heyres for ever Bulloyn, and from Bulloyn alonges the see costes to the toppe of the hill beyond Hardelow, and so from the top of that hill alonges as the hilles lyeth, continueng the height of the hilles beyond Leekes, untill ye come to that parte of the Countie of Guisnes next adjoyning to the hilles, which We have in our possession, and all the grownd between the sayd hilles and the see syde. And in case, having set furth the greatnes of this offer by all suche wayes and meanes, as ye shall thinke best and metest for that purpose, and having conferred the same with the small and meagre overtures made by them heretofore, you shall in thend perceyve that they do mislike this condition, and will not accept the same, you shall finally in the treatie of this branche, rather than fayle, offer unto them the remission for ever of our pension perpetuall, wherwith and with tharrerages and other thinges aforsaid We can be pleased to departe frankly withall, so as the French King will give graunte release and surrender in to our handes, to thuse of Us and our heyres for ever, that small portion of ground aforsaid. And here you may set furth unto them what a great benefite and lykelihode of our continuall frendship for ever shuld ensue by the concluding of the peax after this sorte; for by this meanes all bogges and occasions of nue quarells might be fully extinguesshed, and this amitie being ones agreed upon have his continuance for ever.

When you shall have travelled with them in this braunche as earnestly as you may, after suche sorte as is aforsaid, yf in thende they will not accept the said condicions, our pleasure is you shall descend to one other offer. And, repeting unto them what great summes of money We have byn and be pleased to remit unto them, besides the remission of our pension perpetuall, for thonly keping of that which is our own, you shall say that ye doubt not but (yf they mean good fayth in the treatie and debating of this mater) they will make a more large, or at the lest as great, an offer to Us for the redemption of that which is none of theirs, and now out of their possession. Wherefore, yf they be nott willing to leave Bulloyn and suche parte of the landes as is aforsaid, butt will sticke precisely to their former request that the same may remayn in the case of redemption; then, besides the payment of our pensions perpetuall and viager, with the salte, from hensfurth according to the former treaties, which must begyn att Mydsomer next the fyrst payment therof, and besides the payment of tharrerages of our said pensions and other debtes due unto Us, the payment wherof We can be contented shalbe stalled at somme reasonable dayes, so as the first payment therof be at Mydsomer next, they must leave to our quiet possession Bulloyn and suche parte of Bullonoys and the Countie of Guysnes, as shalbe signified unto you by a plat, assone as Rogers, who is alredy sent for, may comme and go unto you, the same to remayn quietly to Us and our heyres, without any their let disturbance clayme or empechement, untill after the payment of the said arrerages and debtes, they shall present and pay upon one day to Us or our heyres two millions of golde, and truely performe in the meane tyme the pactes and convenauntes agreed upon. Which summes of 2 millions they ought not in reason to accompt over great, seing they wer bound unto Us upon thagrement, after our last warres with them, to pay unto Us as greate a summe as this is, and yet had then no town nor possessions rendred unto them, wheras now they shall have a town, whiche hath cost Us more then twyes two myllions, and is with our great charges now made a town impregnable for ever.

Yf you shall see that after the comming of the said plat, and debating of

this mater, they will agree with you upon the conditions aforsaid touching the redemption; our pleasure is that you shall remember and provide that it may be specially convenaunted that the limites and bondes of our pale betwene Bullonoyes and our Countie of Guysnes for ever shall be from the ryver at Marguison as it passeth from Leekes to the see syde, whiche being tholde limites of our pale in very deade, and now eftsones reduced to our possession agayn, We require to be so provided for, as all occasions of any other strif for limites may be appeased and taken away hereafter.

Yow shall also understande thatt We have seen tharticles devised by the Frenche Commissioners touching the maters of the Scottes, which appereth unto Us so straunge, and so farre bothe from commen reason, and from that frendly compounding of thinges, whiche they woulde seme to declare, that We can not but thinke they mynd not in dede the perfiting of this amitie, so earnestly as hath byn pretended. Which thing as it may appere by all the rest of their doinges and conferences at this tyme, being all the same grounded more upon their own willes then upon any indifferency, so in this point of the Scottes the same is most manifest. For heretofore, when thother Frenche Commissioners treated this mater of the comprehension of the Scottes with you, our Secretary, they semed then contented to leave the Scottes uncomp rehended, and to passe them over in silence, upon your promisse only that We woulde forbear textend our force by invasion of their countree without nue occasion ministred unto Us. And therefore you shall declare unto them that in this mater, yf their master mynd now in dede to have thold amitie betwene Us and Him renued, there is no more cause nott to agree now, then ther was att thatt tyme when they offred thatt offer to yow, nor greter cause to sticke so moche at this mater of the Scottes now, then ther hath byn at the concluding of other treaties heretofore. And, seing We require nothing of the Scottes, but only the perfourmance of their own pactes and convenauntes, We thinke they ought in reason be well contented with suche order touching the mater of the Scottes, as We have heretofore signified by our former instructions unto you. And in case they shall comme to no conformite in none of the wayes aforsayd, then to declare playnly unto them, thatt they bee so moche wedded to ther own wylls, thatt they can blame no man els for the lett of the peax butt them selves; and thatt they be thonly occasions nott only of disturbaunce and greatt expenses of money of both sydes, butt also by this meanes hynder them selves from doing of other enterprises of more valour to them, peradventure by 6 tymes, then this is. And lett them take good heed that for

refusall to give twoo myllyons for so strong and goodly a hold as thatt now is, they be nott occasionars to them selves to spend 6.

Fynally, yf they in thende shall perchaunce make a motion or overture to have a trues agreed upon, We can also be pleased you shall assent therunto, and conclude a truex, so as it be not under 2 yeres, and they to cease to disturbe Us in the meane tyme in Bulloyn, leaving it to our quiet possession, with suche other quantitie of Bullonoys and the Countie of Guysnes, as shalbe signified unto you with all spede possible by an other plat¹ whiche We mynd to send by Rogers unto you.

MCCCLVI. PAGET to PETRE.²

M^R PETER, with most harty commendacions. These may be to signifie unto you that even now my men arryved here with the Kinges Majesties letters, and others from you, for the which I thank you most hartely. And as toching the contentes of the Kinges Majesties letters, I shall for my part endeavour my self, to the uttermost of my power, to bring all thing to passe to His Majesties contentation, so as at the leest His Majestic shall see no want of good will in me. My Lord Admyral went yesternyght to the see, in my Lord of Hertfordes litle bote. Our Lord I trust hath preserved hym, and brought hym in savety to the Downes, for elles it wer gret pitye; for he is a worthy gentleman, and gyven to serve His Majestic as moche as any man that ever I saw. At his departing he mynded to bring furth the army this day to clere the sees of these galleys, and to morowe to land about Bulleyn or Newehaven, and so to returne to me, uppon supposition that this nyght the Kinges Majesties pleasure (as it is alredy) or to morow, shuld arryve here. If he cum, then my Lord of Hertford may be absent, as the Kinges Majestic hath appoynted; if not, then must my Lord of Hertford nedes be present to matche thAdmyral, who this mornyng hath sent a commandement to all the galleys to retyre home, so as my Lord Admyral will retyre the Kinges Majesties men of warre. But I trust the galleys shalbe entreated to returne in the myschieve. M^r Seymour, who landed here yesternyght before my Lord

MCCCLVIII. PHILIP COUNT PALATINE to KING HENRY VIII.²

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine Clementissime, Majestati Vestre Regie salutem. Serenissime quoque Regine ac Principis Marie, Electori Palatino, ac illustrissime ejus conjuge denunciavi, que illis et gratissima et acceptissima fuit, pecieruntque se vicissim cum omni observancia Regiæ Vestræ Majestati recom- mendare. Ex litteris vero, quas ad Regiam Vestram Majestatem jam Majes- tatis Vestræ Orator mittit, intelliget amplissime quid hic actum sit in eo negocio, quod utrique nostrum ex Anglia discedente Vestra Majestas com- misit; successum vero non contigisse pro voluntate Vestre Majestatis et mea, vehementer crucior; ita intelligat Vestra Majestas me nihil diligencie aut opere pretermisisse, quo res ad obtatum finem perduceretur; quod quoniam a me perfici non potuit, non credit Vestra Majestas quo dolore conficior. Spero tamen, que est Vestram Majestatem clemencia, meam voluntatem et conatum in bonam partem accepturam, et pro ipso successu amplexuram. Ego enim in hac causa conficienda non minus attentus fui, quam si de mea ipsius salute et vita res agenda fuissent. Suppliciter Vestram Majestatem suplico, ut bene- volenciam suam erga me perpetuare dingnetur, mihi que gracie singnificare velit quandoquidem illustrissimus Elector, meus patruus, in matrimonij causa summam complacenciam habet, ac summis votis exoptat eam causam perfici, ¹ This appears to have been Burley's ship, which he deserted the moment she touched the ground. Lisle in a letter to Petre of the 7th of May reports the loss of this shallopp, the identity of which was then doubtful. The information was first sent to Lisle by the Admiral of France, and Lisle states "thAdmyrall sent me worde yt shold be the Fenix, and that all the men were in "yello: the Fenix, which my Lorde Great Chamberleyn gave His Majeste, her men be not in "yello." This shews that the crew of each vessel had a distinctive colour for their dress.

Capiti, Domino meo clementissimo.

MCCCLIX. MASONE to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASETH Your Majestie to be advertysed, that I arryved here at Heydelberg, in companye with Duke Philipp, the 4th of Maye, and immedyatlye uppon my comming to the town I desyred the saide Duke Philipp, that thElectour might have worde of my being there, to thintent it might please him to sende me his pleasour when I might have accesse unto him.

This night I supped with Otho Henryke, to whome, for that I was advertysed of his good affection towarde Your Majestie, I made your recomen-dations verye diligentlye, which he toke in verye good parte, and shewed me how longe sithen, and when, and where, he hadd first seen Your Majestie; from the which tyme he hadd ben allwaye Your Majesties faithfull servaunt, and so wolde contynue; with many wordes tending to this effect.

The next morning thElectour sent his Chauncelour to me, to signifie unto me that he hadd harde the night before, verye late, of my comming, and that I was hartely wellcoome, and that at 12 of the clocke he wolde be gladd to gyve me audyence. I asked the saide Chauncelour, whither the Frenche Ambassadors were yet gone, which I knewe were departed aboute 3 days before my commyng hither. "There was," quod he, "an Abbot here, I have “ forgotten his name.” “ Bassefowntayne?” quod I. “ Ye the same,” quod he, “ and latelye hath taken his leave, and is in his journeye homewarde.” “ It is a wonderfull thing,” quod I, “ to considre thes Frenche mens luckes, “ to se them everye daye begyled with faire wordes one or an other, and yet “ to se how Princes woll still contynue the daunger thereof.” “ In good “ faithe,” quod he, “ I knowe no great mattier he hadd here to do; and what “ so ever it were, I thinke he nede not much boste his successe.” And herewith he rose, having small fansye, as me thought, to commun farther in those mattiers; and, after my hartye thanks for his paynes, with request of myne humble commendations to thElectour, he went his waye. At 12 of the clocke, being in arredynes to go to the castle of thElectour, one of his gentlemen came to me, and tolde me that forasmuche as by reason of the fowle and raynye wether, and in dede it rayned sore all the daye, he was so troubled with his gowte, as he mynded not to ryse that daye, he prayed me not to be discontented to differr my commyng unto him untill the next daye at 9 of the clocke. I tolde him I wolde be verye sorrye to presse him farther then shoulde be commodious for his healthe, or any other respecte; and, when he shoulde commaunde me, I was redy to waight uppon him, either at the hower appointed, or at any other tyme he sholde thinke good. All this mean tyme I traveyled by all the meanes I coulede, aswell by Duke Philipp as by Your Majesties Agent Doctour Mounthe, of whome assuredlye Your Majestic hath a necessarye servaunt, a diligent and a faithfull man, and one that is here in good credite, to lerne in what state the saide Electour might stonde, both with the Frenche King and with the Protestantes. And, albeit I hadd herdd saye that Bassefowntayne hadd highlye ben here entreteyned, and that thElectour hadd latelye sent his Secretary Hubert with Vopisperg in to Fraunce, and that I hadd seen by the waye dyvers prestes, maryed, by the saide Electours permission, and hadd sein allso in writing thabrogation of private Masse, by his authoritye, with thalteration of the ceremonyes, which ar rekened moste substantiall in the commun Masse, yet coulede I by no mean learn that any conclusyon of confederation was passed with the one or with the other, as yet; but, if any thing shoulde be passed with the Frenche King, it sholde be doon by his Secretarye latelye sent in to Fraunce, and the determination of the mattiers of religion at the meting of their Commissaryes at Ratisbone (for at Wormes was no thing doon); and therefore it was not thought a mysse betwen me and M^r Mownte, to shewe unto thElectour my hole commission. For we thought it were possible that thinge, being yet but in trayne, might, by thonorable overtures in my saide commission, be differred, and paradventure clene altered.

At

At 9 of the clocke before apoynted came unto me a gentleman of thElectours, and tolde me that, when I thought good, thElectour was redy for me; and so we went to gither to the Castell; and at the hall dore the Marishall mett me, who is, next unto the Chauncelour, moste in credite with him, and of his Privye Counsell; and wellcomyng me unto the Courte, brought me to thElectours uttre Privye Chawmbre, where after I hadd taryed a verye litle while, thElectour him self, accompanied with his Chauncelour, cam owt of his bedd chawmbre unto me, and first wellcommed me with a verye gladd chere, and asked me hartelye, how Your Majestie didd. "Very well, Sir," quod I, "thankes be to God, and hath Him affectuouslye commended unto you, as you shall more largelye perceyve by His Majesties letters;" which therewith I delyvered unto him. "Be they in Latten?" quod he, "Ye, Sir," quod I. "Then holde, Chauncelour," quod he, "and reede them." That doon by his saide Chauncelour, he yelded harty thankes unto Your Majestie, for Your Majesties good mynde towarde him declared by the letters; "and now," quod he, "you ar again wellcoom as the Kinges Ambassadour, and, if I have not hitherto shewed you suche honour as apperteyneth to that office, I trust to make amendes with that I woll cause to be doon to you hereafter. And, forasmuche as I perceyve that you have some credite to declare unto me, I am redy to here it, praying you, if it shall not be tedyous unto you, to declare the same unto me in Latten" (for all this while hitherto we hadd communed to gither in Frenche), "to thintent my Chauncelour may allso undrestonde what you shall saye." "With a good will, Sir," quod I; and so I declared unto him at good lengthe, in Latten, Your Majesties rejoyce of his calling to the dignitye of thElectour, of which estate for his wisdome &c. Your Majestie thought him longe a gone moste worthy; thoccasyon that Your Majestie hadd not this doon any soner, for the supplye whereof uppon knowledge of the custome in lyke caces, it hath pleased Your Majestie to sende me unto him, with Your Majesties promesse to contynue your owlde amytye and good will towarde him, and that not in wordes onelye, butt by dedes allso, as occasion shoulde serve, without dowbting of the reciproke in him. After I hadd of this parte made an ende, with as good wordes as I coulde devyse, grownding me uppon myne instructions given me in this bihalf, he retyred him self a litle a syde, and counseilled with his Chauncelour, for answer to be made to me in this parte. And after they hadd ben a while to gither, the Chauncelour turned to me and tolde me that his master hadd commaunded him to declare unto me, that he gave moste humble thankes unto His Majestie, that it wolde pleas the same to remembre his powre frende with so honorable a gratulation.

gratulation. And, whereas Your Majestie vouchesafed to wright, that for his wisdom, and other good and honorable qualitties, by me rehersed with many wordes, Your Majestie thought him longe sithen worthy of that dignitie, he knewe no suche thing in him self; but forasmuche as it hadd pleased Godd to call him to suche a burden as he might not well refuse, he wolde praye unto Him to supplye his naturall lackes, and to minstre unto him suche speciall grace, as he might be the more hable somewhat to dischargd this cure of that, the which he thought him self moste unmete. And, touching thallegation of Your Majestie for his delaye of this gratulation, he thought that excuse to be no thing necessarye, for he hadd hadd so many proofes of Your Majesties tendre love towarde him, aswell in their first acquayntaunce on this syde the see, as sithen in your own Realme, where he was so entreteyned, as no Prynce coulde have hadd more honour shewed unto him, both for good entreteynement and liberall rewarde at his departing, and sithen that by sondry letters and messages, as he coulde not but assure him self Your Majestie to be his assured good Lorde and frende; and in case there hadd ben in this delaye any mattier, the same hadd now ben right well recompensed by this honorable message, that it hadd pleased Your Majestie to declare unto him Your Majesties mynde for the contynuaunce of your amitye and good will towarde him, he coulde not but much rejoyce thereof, speciallye Your Majestie sending him worde of your redynes to shewe the same in effecte as occation shall serve thereunto. And whereas Your Highnes putteth no dought but to fynde the lyke in him, he was right gladd that Your Majestie hath that confidence in him, wherein Your Majestie may be sure never to be deceyved. This was the somme of his answer; which doon, "Sir," quod I, (and here I began to speake Frenche) "I have other mattiers of summe importaunce concernyng the honour and benefite of your familie to shewe unto you, which I wolde gladelye declare unto you a lone, of whome allso I am commaunded to desyre promesse, uppon your honour, to kepe the same secrett;" and so furthe, as is att lengthe sett forthe in myne instructions. "What so ever you shall saye unto me," quod he, "I woll not faile but kepe it as close, as my sowle is within my bodye, which promesse I make allso for my Chauncelour, whose advyse I use in moste secrett affaires; and therefore I praye you putt no feare in any of us bothe, butt tell, hardelye, what you have to saye, and that in Latten as you didd before." "Sir," quod I, "I dought not of your Chauncelours silence, namelye, uppon your promesse for him; but forasmuche as I am charged by the King my master, whose direction I neither may, neither will, breake in any poynte, to communicate theses
" thinges

“ thinges to no person butt to your self; and yet nevertheles to requyre
“ of you the keping secrett of the same, I beseche you,” quod I, “pardon me, “ and give me leave to shewe my commission to your own person, according
“ as I am commaunded.” “In the name of Godd,” quod he, and so commaunded his Chauncelour to go asyde; “and yet to be playne with you,” quod he, “this is the first tyme that ever I didd the lyke, and I never do “ any thing without his advyse.” “Sir,” quod I, “I am a servaunt, and “ must do as I am bydd to do, trustyng yow woll not take this my doing in “ any yll parte.” “No,” quod he, “you do very well, and now lett me here, “ what you have to saye, and be you sure it shall not coome abrede by me, “ untill suche tyme as the Kinges Highnes shall therewith be pleased.”
Hereuppon I entred to the declaration of the hole mattier, how Duke Philippp, being in Englonde for other purposes, hadd entredd again in to the communication of the maryage, how, and uppon what causes and consyderations, Your Majestie was moved to beare unto him Your Highnes speciall good will and favour, and to desire thadvancement of his honour and dignitie; what mean Your Majestie thought the highe waye for the forwarding of that affaيرة; the commoditie and welth that was lyke to ensue to Christendom by that mean, both your reputations consydered; what kyndnes Your Highnes wolde take therin; and what Your Majestie sholde the more be enclyned to do in consyderation thereof; the honour that by this maryage must necessarilye growe to the hole familye, whither succession shoulde ensue bitwen them or not; her possibilitie farr better then it was, when this communication was first begoon; the reputation of her person; what reason wolde him to do, thes thinges well consydered; Your Majesties devyse for somme faithfull and secrett man, and with him summe sobre and upright lerned man to be sent in to Englonde, and in the mean season to kepe him self indifferent from all kyndes of confederation; what Your Majestie wolde and might do in his mattier of Denmarcke, and my chardge to waight uppon him, &c. Thes poyntes, with all other conteyned in myne instructions, after I hadd at great lengthe opened unto him, and hadd spent a good tyme about the same, I thought I wolde se, what he wolde saye thereunto, before I went to the laste parte of my chardge; and therefore here I made my reverence, and taryed to here his answer. After he hadd a while loked uppon me, and I lykewise uppon him, “Is this,” quod he, “all you have to saye?” “No, Sir,” quod I, “I have one thing more, but I feared to trouble you with many thinges at “ ons, and therefore I wolde have been gladd to have hardd your answer, so “ farr as I have allredye goone, before I shoulde go any further.” “Naye, “ I praye

“ I praye you,” quod he, “ make an ende, to thintent that, your commission “ thoroughlye knowen, I maye make you an answer all to gither.” Then I shewed him, how Your Grace hadd ben enfourmed of the longe contynuaunce of certain Frenche men with him, and the levying of men daylye by them in his countreys for thannoyaunce of His Majestie, which undre that pretence, by contynuaunce in thes parties, were privye of his and other strengthes, purposes, and determinations, wherof might to him and others ensue no litle daunger; and so forthe, according as my instructions ledd me; with Your Majesties request, that from hensforthe he wolde, by him self and his frendes, by all that they might, both staye the levying of any power for the ayde of the Frenche King, and lett allso the passage of any suche as might for that purpose be levyed; wherein he shoulde give Your Majestic good occation to knowledge his syncere amitye towarde Your Highnes. And here I sett forthe, aswell as my witt wolde serve, the nature of the French men, their practyses ever for their own commodities, and the furthering of their owne state and domynyons, which optayned, they forgatt allwaye what so ever kyndnes coule be shewed unto them, wherof I tolde him Your Grace was a right good example, Who hadd so much doon for them as was not possible for any Prynce to do more, “ and yet,” quod I, “ you se now in what termes they stonde to “ gither.” And here I made an ende. ThElectour, when he sawe I hadd all sayde, studying a good season with him self, and now and then castyng his eye uppon the Chauncelour, who stode in a corner a good waye of, “ The “ mattiers,” quod he, “ which you have proponed, ar bothe of somme lengthe “ and of much importaunce, and requyre therfore a tyme to make answer unto
“ the same.” And forasmuche as we hadd ben now a good while to gither, and that it was highe dynner tyme, he desyred me not to be discontent, if he differed for the present to shewe his mynde therein; but he wolde with diligence considre the thinges, and thereuppon make me such an answer, as in reason I ought to be content; and in the mean season he requyred me to commaunde as I were at home, and so furthe, with many good and faire wordes. I answered that it sholde be well doon of him to take what leasure him self should thinke good; praying him nevertheles, as sone as he hadd determined what answer to make, I might be sent for to here the same; for I hadd ben longe in my journey, and I wolde be gladd, with as good spede as I cowlde, to sende Your Majestie worde of myne arryvall here. “ Yes,” quod thElectour, “ you shall lese no tyme, it shall not be longe butt we shall “ talke again to gither.” And here he fell to famylyer communication of other thinges, and enquiryed of the state of Highnes bodye; to the which I answered

answered as I thought mete. "I wolde to Godd," quod he, "we were both " as yonge, as when we mett first to gither." "Godd make you bothe," quod I, "longe olde men, and to enjoye many yeres of them that be to come,
 " for backe again you shall never go." "Trewthe," quod he, "in dede, by " Godd, I am a good deale older then He is, and yet besydes that, I have " the gowte, which maketh me that I can kepe no companye with any man,
 " and I am sorrye therefore for your sake, with whome I wolde have ben
 " gladd to have dyned; but you shall have to kepe you companye my brother " and my 2 nephewes, and I pray you be hartely merry:" and thus he went his waye. After dynner I departed, and all that daye hard no more of the mattier.

The next daye the Chauncelour cam to me about 3 of the clocke at after none, and tolde me that this ill favoured wether hadd so layed upp the Duke, that he coule not speake with me him self, which otherwise he wolde gladdlye have doon, "and hath willed me," quod he, "to tell you that here is " a bruite in all the town, ye, and as he is advertysed in other places too,
 " of the contracte concluded bitwen the Kyng your masters doughter and
 " Duke Philipp, which he wolde me to signifie unto you for his own excuse,
 " to thintent you shoulde not thinke any suche thing to have coome owt by
 " him, of whome yesterday you requyred so great secresye." "Sir," quod I,
 " I dought not of my Lorde thElectours keping secrett of thinges which he " shall promesse so to do, and of this thing he can not be demed an authour, " whiche in dede is no thing so, as I am sure he knoweth; but if there be any
 " suche bruite, I thinke," quod I, "it is spronge by somme of Duke Philippes
 " servauntes, for that they sawe conference ons or twise bitwen the saide
 " Ladye Marye and the Duke; and bruites uppon small occasions sett the " ende before the begynning." "In good faithe," quod he, "my Lorde as yet " hath opened to me no parte of your secrett communication. Mary, foras-
 " muche as he is nott now in estate to commun with you him self, he hath
 " willed me to resorte unto you on his bihalf, and to knowe of you, in cace
 " of a treatye of a confederation bitwen the Kinges Majestie and him, what " articles aswell of mattiers of religion as of other amitye, the same shoulde
 " consist uppon." "For tharticles," quod I, "of the mattiers of religion,
 " I have no thing in particuler, saving that where, as touching thabolition of " the Bisshopp of Romes authoritye, and the disagreing to any Generall
 " Counsaill to be called by Him, His Highnes hath ben enfourmed that
 " reaporte hath ben made, He wolde not therin joyne with others of lyke
 " opynion here, His Majestie wolde me to declare that thing to be no thing
 " so, neither that any ouverture therof was ever made from hens, &c. But “ this he may be sure, the lerned messenger to be sent from hens, shall not “ fynde His Majestie swerve in any poynte from the straight and direct lyne “ of Scripture and the Gospell of Chryste ; in which cace if it may pleas the “ Electour to joyne with Him, and enduce the rest of his frendes to do the “ same, the honour of the benefite thereof, which necessariye must growe to “ the quyett of the state of Christendom, shall remayne to him for ever, and “ His Majestie shall have the more occasyon to forwarde the great matter “ uppon conditions reasonable for bothe sydes. Touching tharticles of “ thamitye, I have no thing delyvered me,” quod I, “ in writing ; but by “ suche conferences, as I have hardd at sondrye tymes in Englonde aswell “ with the Kinges Majestie, as with some other of his Counsell, I can declare “ I thinke,” quod I, “ the speciall poyntes, which in myne opinion were to be “ convented and concluded uppon, which this night I woll gather in to “ articles, and to morowe in the morning send them unto thElectour, if I may “ not coome unto him my self.” The sure knowledge wherof, and of the rest, he sholde more certainlye knowe by suche as Your Majestie wolde wishe to be sent in to Englonde.

The next morning the Chauncelour failed not to be with me again for the saide articles, which being tourned in to Latten in suche sorte as Your Majestie shall perceyve by the coppie of the same¹, I delyvered unto him, sealed ; requyring him to delyver the same unto thElectour, as sett forthe of my self, which I thought were so reasonable, as the saide Electour wolde lyke them verye well ; praying him, if it were possible, I might this daye have somme kynde of answer, being verye desyrous to signifie unto Your Majestie the tyme of my commyng hither ; wherewith I wolde be gladd allso to write somewhat that were worthe the reading.

The self same daye that I hadd accesse unto thElectour in the forenone, which was on Wednesdaye last, Duke Philipp hadd accesse unto him in the after none ; and before his going unto him, I putt him in remembraunce, as I hadd done often by the waye, what thing he sholde chieflye followe with thElectour as the onelye mean to bring this great mattier to the better passe ; and prayed him, when he had spoken with the saide Electour, I might at somme convenyent place mete with him, to knowe what lykelyhode he founde at thElectours hande of consenting or otherwise to suche thinges as I hadd proponed ; but from that daye to this daye, which is Sondaye, I coulde never here of him, albeit, aswell by Baron Hadicke as by somme of myn own servauntes, I have sent to him to desyre to speake with him, either at his brothers, or at his own house. I hadd answer that he wolde sende for me this daye and that daye; but it wolde not be; whereat somewhat marveyling and fearing that he hadd but a slendre answer, I desyred yesterdaye M^r Mownte to take the payn to watche for him, either at the Courte, or elles where he sholde here that he were, and to pray him that either we might speake to gither, or elles that he wolde sende me worde by him, what he hadd doone with thElectour. He fownde him dyseased uppon his bedd at the Courte, I think ex merore, and telling him first that I had sent him to se how he didd, for that thes many days I hadd harde no thing of him, he entred finallye in to the mattier. Duke Philipp tolde him that he hadd first opened unto thElectour the manner of his entreteignement in Your Majesties service, and that he hadd made Your Majestie promes to serve You against all men; thEmperour, thEmpire, the Protestantes, and the Palatinate excepted, "which," quod he, "thElectour semed to lyke verye well; and then," quod he, "I entred with him in the other mattiers, both according to such thinges as I hadd harde of the Kinges Majesties own mowthe, as to suche instructions allso, as I hadd receyved of his Ambassadour; to the which he made none other answer," quod he, "but that the purposes were weightye, and of great importaunce; and that, as he hadd taken with thAmbassadour a tyme to think uppon an answer, so wolde he do the lyke with me. And thus," quod he, "he retyred him self, seming to be ill at ease; and sithen that, I never saw him." "I praye you," quod he, "commende me to thEmbassadour; and, when he writeth to the King my master, pray him to make to Him my moste humble commendations." And thus M^r Mownte cam his waye.

This daye in the afternone, being Sondaye, cam unto me the Chauncelour; and first he made the Electours excuse that he coulde not speake with me him self, and tolde me that sithen our last conference to gither, either with taking colde in the wyde chambre, or elles by stonding to long uppon his fete, bicawse he wolde shew him self better, then he was in dede, he never came owt of his bedd, "and therfore," quod he, "perforce he hath opened to me your mattier, and hath sent you by me this answer unto the same. First," quod he, "touching His Majesties inclination to his nepveue Duke Philipp, and his giving of eare unto his suite touching the marryage, which at this daye is the moste honorable partye in thestate of Christendome, both for her possibilitye, and other her vertues and noble and excellent qualities, as you have at good lengthe declared unto him, and as him self allso doth well knowe and considre, he rendreth unto the Kinges Majestie his moste humble thankes; and the more, for that he perceyveth this affection to be partelye grownded “ uppon thauncyenne amytye and acquayntaunce bitwen Your Majestie and “ him, and desyreth Your Majestie to contynue that good mynde, wherby

 “ all the familye is and shalbe moste bounde unto Your Majestie.

“ Touching the confederation, if the mattier touched him alone, there “ were somewhat to be sayde to it, and yet having made so many olde “ leagues as he hath, and with so dyverse men, as with the Emperour, the “ Duke of Baviere, the Landsgrave, and so forthe, he coulde not, without “ great consideration of the same, entre in to any new; for as all confedera-“ tions bring somme burden with them, so must they be well wayed to gither, “ that the one be not repugnant to thother, and how they may stonde to “ gither. But, whereas the ouverture is made not onelye for him self to be “ confederated, butt to enduce allso the rest of his frendes unto the same;
 “ to that he neither may, neither will agree, for that were to great a burden “ for him to be a sollicitour unto them, who have ben longe, and yet “ contynuallye ar, uppon him to entre in to the confederation for religion, “ he woll in no wise turn the cace, and make their parte his; but if it wolde “ pleas Your Majestie Your self to compasse them, they agreing unto You,
 “ he woll not be behinde, butt woll be right gladd to joyne with them therin.
 “ The doar of the mattier with them, he woll in no cace be.

“ Concerning religion,” quod he, “ he hath framed his consyence throughlye
 “ to Confessionem Augustanam, and hath so accepted the same as he trusteth “ not to varrye from it during lief, which determination he hath not rashelye “ entred in to, but with longe tyme and great deliberation. And to saye the “ trewth, if he were determyned to sende any man unto Your Majestie in “ those mattiers, he wotteth not where to fynde any such indifferent man,
 “ as Your Majestie semeth to requyre, his hole provynce, aswell the Nobles “ as the Clergye and others being so throughlye bent in one trade, as he “ thinketh him self was the last of all his jurisdiction that cam in to the “ same; and therfore he desyreth Your Majestie to have him herin excused,
 “ being assured that if he sholde consent hereunto, and wolde be a traveilour “ with his frendes, upon the retourn of his messenger, for thappointing of an “ indifferent place for lerned men to mete &c., he sholde never be hable to “ perswade them thereunto, but by that mean sholde roon him self in to the “ note of inconstancye, which sholde be all that he sholde wyn therebye.
 “ For thEmperour, at his late being at Spire, was in hande with them for the “ lyke, and hadd for answer that their doctryne hadd often inoughe ben “ disputed uppon, and was well knowen throughe the worlde, and they “ intended to bring that mattier no more in questyon, wherin by so much “ tyme and great deliberation they were throughlye persuaded. And yet, for “ all

“ all this,” quod he, “ is he in no confederation herin, albeit he hath accepted “ it, and myndeth resolutelye so to contynue, so great a mattier thinketh he
 “ to coom in to a confederation, which nevertheles consisteth in no other “ poynte, but in the mayntenaunce the one of them of the other, in cace of “ invasion, for any pointe of religion conteyned in Confessione Augustana.
 “ For the Frenche men he can not denye but they have ben going and “ comming longe unto his Courte; and as for Bassefowntayn was sometye “ a studyent in this Universitye, and hath here much acquayntaunce, and “ other businesse he hadd none, but to make merrye, and is retourned yeven “ yesterdaye,” quod he, “ and spake not with thElectour. Ryckrode was “ sometye Wolphanges servaunt, and commeth now and then unto the “ Courte to thElectour for the satisfaction of his deuty.

“ For the mattier of Denmarcke, wherof I sholde have rather spoken,” quod he, “ thElectour loketh for none other thing, neither for estate or “ recompence, but onelye the delyverye of his father in lawe, whose “ detayning in pryson owght to be wayed of all Prynces, whose partes it “ were, for thexample thereof, to do their uttermoste for the setting of Him at “ libertye. This thing the Frenche King hath taken uppon Him to bring “ abought, and this is thole occasyon, that we have to do with Him and his;
 “ wherein nevertheles if it shall pleas the Kinges Majestie to travaill allso, “ He shall do moste lyke Him self, and bynde allso bothe the saide King of “ Denmarcke, and all that shall have any thing that waye, to beare unto Him, “ therefore, all the good will and affection as to suche a noble dede may seme to “ appertayne.” And here he made an ende. “ I have hard,” quod I, “ the “ answer made unto me on your master thElectours behalf, which you might “ have concluded (hadd you so thought good) in fewer wordes, and have sayed “ that you wolde accept no part of my legation; for so, and in suche trade, “ ronnethe throughlye your answer, as I se not but you conclude all in one “ sorte. Surelye I wolde have ben gladd to have receyved a better answer, and “ that onelye for the forwarding of thallyaunce, which I am much desyrous of;
 “ as ministers for the moste parte wolde fayne that such thinges, as ar com“ mitted to their maynyng, might allwaye coome to good effect: but, seing
 “ your determination here is suche as yow have declared, I thanke thElectour
 “ for the same as the powre gentleman thanked Kyng Lewes for his spedye “ answer in the refusall of his petition. But me thinketh it might have lyked “ my Lorde thElectour to have declared this answer to me him self, or at the “ least he being present, lyke as I proponed the mattier to him, and to none “ other man. And I pray you,” quod I, “ tell him I feare my master will “ take

“ take this proceeding in not so good parte as I wolde wishe; and therefore, if “ it were his pleasure, I wolde be gladd to speake with him, before I dis-“ patche in to Englonde.” “ In good faith,” quod he, “ if yow hadd it at is “ own handes, you shoulde have hadd none other thing then you have hardd “ of me; and be you sure if he cowlde by any possibilitye, for his disease, “ have spoken with you, he wolde not have used a messenger; but I wolbe “ playn with you, he is in the diett.” “ Well,” quod I, “ I woll not faile but “ make reaporte hereof unto my master faithfullye of that you have shewed “ unto me; but me think,” quod I, “ I se not well upon what grownde he “ refuseth to be a mean to the rest of his frendes to coome in to the con“ federation, for as farr as I can beare the thing awaye, you saide it was not “ mete for him to sollicite this mattier, being not yet confederat with them; “ and me thinketh therebye, if he hadd listed to harken unto the matter, he “ hadd much more facilitye to compasse the same with them, then if he hadd “ ben throughlye in confederation with them; for they hanging uppon hym (as “ they doo) to coome in to a bande with them, and so much desyring the “ same, if he sholde saye unto them, ‘ I woll coome to you, and bring a King “ ‘ with me, if you wolbe content with reason,’ me semeth the bargain sholde “ be verye yll in that cace that they wolde refuse.” “ I tolde you,” quod he,
“ he wolde not tourne the cace, neither woll make him self a suiter, that “ now is sued unto, and when it shall lyke him to coome in to the con“ federation, he woll come to them frankelye and frelye, so as he may be the “ better wellcoome.” “ This is to saye in fewe wordes,” quod I, “ he woll not.
“ And touching religion, me thinke,” quod I, “ there hadd ben no great “ mattier to sende, for litle knowe you what the King my master wolde “ coome unto; and ons I dare assure you, loke as the scripture and the “ streight lyne of the Gospell wolde have ledd Him, so wolde He have “ proceded; and I am sure you mynde none other; and I am sure the “ countreye is not so destitute, butt some reasonable lerned man may be “ fownde therin. I meane, more leanyng to reason then to fansye, and this
“ I thinke His Majestie nameth indifferencye.” “ Well,” quod he, “ a quyett “ consyence wolde not be troubled; I have tolde you my masters saying,
“ and I can go no further.” “ And,” quod I, “ touching the Frenche mens “ doinges here; if I durst be playne with you, me thinke the same ar so “ open unto the worlde, as there is to evident dissimulation in your wordes.
“ Is it not knowen,” quod I, “ the longe tyme that Bassefowntayn, Rycrode,
“ and others have haunted here? How frendelye they have ben entreteigned?
“ And what chere and revell they have made here? Is it to be thought “ that they have doone all this for their owne pleasures; the town being so “ unplesant

“ unplesant, as who hadd not much to do therin might, me thinke, find “ other places of much more pleasure? Is it not knowen that Ricrode hath “ latelye levyed men, and ar in their waye towarde Fraunce? Is it not “ knowen that he hath bargayned with 36 capitaynes for the levying
 “ of a great nombre? which nevertheles I think rather to be a bragg, then “ that he entendeth to levye the same. Do we not know that Hubert, “ Secretarye and Counsellour to thElectour, is gone in to Fraunce in com-“ panye with Vopisperg? Is all this to make merrye?” When he sawe me this earnest, “ I have no commission,” quod he, “ to entre so farr communica“ tion with you, and yet somewhat to saye in the mattier; you knowe the “ French men, where so ever they coome they woll be merrye, and woll so “ seke entreteignement, as there is no remedye but they must have it; and “ bankett and revell woll theye, if they were in pryson; and for Rykeroddes “ levying of any men, they were so fewe, as I never hard of them; but in “ dede I herd saye he wolde abought Argentyne levye a fewe for the fur“ nishing of somme enseignes, which by death or otherwise were dismynished “ in Fraunce. Whither he have doon so, ye or not, and what is becomm of “ them, if they be levyed,” quod he, “ I can not tell.” “ What,” quod I, “ if “ he woll leavye the great nombre, for the which he hath appointed the saide
 “ 36 capitaines?” “ Mary,” quod he, “ I think thElectour woll not suffre “ him to passe his countreys with them; for the Protestantes, at their late “ meting at Wormes, have concluded that it were not expedyent that so many “ men shoulde be lett slipp awaye, untill suche tyme as it were knowen, what “ nede men shoulde have of them at home.” “ This is a commun respect,” quod I, “ and of all lykelyhode shall ende, when thEmperour shalbe departed “ owt of Germanye.” “ I knowe not that,” quod he, “ I have shewed you my “ master thElectours determination, and now woll I take my leave. If any “ thing that is in the Courte may do you pleasure, my master wolde you “ sholde be bolde therof.” “ I thank him,” quod I, “ and you allso.” And thus he wolde nedes take his leave. “ Sir,” quod I, “ albeit I dought not of “ any thing, that thElectour shall ons have promysed, yet for the dischardge
 “ of my deuty towarde my master, I desyre you moste hartelye to putt him “ from me eftsones in remembraunce to kepe this mattier secrett.” “ I war-“ raunt you,” quod he, “ as surelye as if it never hadd been spoken of.”
 And this is theeffect of the fruit that hitherto is issued of this message;
 wherin if I have not in all thinges doon according unto Your Majesties expectation, I do moste humblye, flatt uppon the grounde, besече Your Majestie to pardon me, and to impute the faught to lacke of witt, and not to lacke

lacke of any good will or faithfullnes, before the want wherof, God willing, my lief shall faile. And thus our Lorde sende Your Majestie victorie uppon your ennemyes, and suche successe in all other Your Majesties affaires, as Your Majesties noble hart can desyre. To the Kinges moste Excellent Majestye.

MCCCLX. HARVEL to KING HENRY VIII.²

Most Sacred Mageste.

IT may please Your Highnes to undirstand, that the Duke and the Signorye sent for me this same day, to participate with me ther occorentes from Constantinople of the 13 of April, wich are, that the Turke was retorning to Constantinople, wher he wold be by al April, and had comandid the Soltanesse his wiffe, wich was abroad, to retorne likewise to Constantinople. The Turke hath also comandid to al those wich are in his wagis, to be in redines with ther horsis, armes, and al other pertayning to the warre, and hath sent to Hungarye 350000 ducates to pay the sodiers wich are in those parties. And the Saniacho of Bossena, a man of grete estimacion, and reputid the best man of warre undir the Turk, was in redines with a grete band of men to depart, but uncertaine for what place.

Ther is departid from Constantinople a certaine captaine, with one galey armid and 6 galeis emptye, to be armid in Barbarye, wher the Turke hath given the said captain a certaine contre, who shold be accompanid with 30 fustes to go abroad in roving. Also ther was another captaine issuid owt of Constantinople with 5 galeis for the defension of thArcipelago. And in Constantinople they made 20 new galeis in stede of 20 other old fustes, wich wer

¹ Masone on the same day wrote two letters to Paget, in one of which he discloses his suspicion of a secret understanding between the Elector and France, and in the other desires to be recalled Paget in transmitting these letters to Petre, in a letter from Guisnes of the 13th, says, "I se no gret cause, in my folish fantazy, why His Majestie shuld any lenger do so muche honour to the County Palatyne, as to kepe an Ambassadour with hym."

There is also an unimportant letter of the 11th from Mont to the King.

not navigable. By the wich thinges it aperith evidently that the Turk designith to make rather expedicion then otherwise this yere, putting himself in order with so grete might and celerite. Also it is observid, that the Frenchmen goith and commith from Constantinople continually and in grete diligence, wherby it is not to be dowtid, but the French King is authour of thes Turkich motions.

In Piemont the Frenchmen doth more and more increse in fortefying of ther townis, having ther in ther garrison abowt 1000 horsemen and 3000 fote-men. It is stimid that they are in grete penurye of vitails, and in feare of gathering of the corne this sommer, withowt wich al ther fortresses shold be lost.

Betwen the Bushop and the Duke of Florence hath folowid none other thing, but that they have writen one to another amiablye; howbeit the Dukes Secretarye¹ remaynith alwais prisoner in Rome, wich is no good signe of benevolence betwen the parties.

It is openly said that Don Ferrante commith to Milan in the Markes of Guastos place, and that the Bushop shold comme to Bononye to speke with thEmperour, whose comming is lokid for in Italye by al the present.

The Signor Ludovico de Larme departid the 2th of thinstant, abowt Your Magestes affayres in Italye, loking daily for his retorne hether.

The captaine, of whome I wrote to M^r Paget by Francesco corier, departid the 28 of April from hens, who I thinke wil in bref be with Your Mageste, Whome God preserve in most prosperous helth and felicitie. From Venice, the 13 of May, 1546.

as they ar couched, then let us know His Majesties pleasure for our returne. If His Majestic shall lyke them, then let us have, I beseche you, a large instruction, with commission (so as we kepe the grosse of the matters in tharticles) to alter or diminish termes or thinges of small importance; for eles we shall never make an ende. And I wol to God you and my Lord of Wynchestre, who hath bene exercised in pennyng of treatyes, woold take sum payn to penne the thing to our handes, who eles I se shalbe troubled therwith for want of experience in the same. If this peax folow (which our Lord graunt, if it be His will) you must instruct us for the tyme of the begynning, for the order to be gyven here, and in 20 other thinges; wherof a gret many must be leefte, as occasion shall arryse, to our poore discretions. It wer well done your instructions to be sett furth articulativ, and in many articles. We have sent you both warr and peax; send you agayn unto us, which you think best.

I remembre President Scoryes tale to me, at my last beyng with thEmperour, of one that beyng condemned to dye by a certain King, which had an asse wherin he had gret felicity; the man offred, to save his lief, that within a 12 moneth he woold make the Kinges asse to speke; wherunto the King accorded. And, beyng sayd unto the man by a frend of his, "What! it is impossible." "Hold thy peax," quod he in French (for it was King Loys the XIth.), "car ou le Roy morera, ou lasne morera, ou lasne parlera, ou je mourera;" signifying therby that in tyme many thinges altered. And so, ere the tyme of payment cum, eyther we shall make sum new bargayn to kepe Bulloyn stil, or the French King for want of keping his convenaunt shall forfait it, or the French King shall dye, and then his sonne nedes not by his othe or honour desyre so moch the recovery of it, or sum other thing will chaunce in the meane tyme, that we shall kepe Bulloyn still. But as God will, so must it be. I thanke you for your gentle visitation of my wief, and will, according to your desyre in your letters, write unto Damozell. To the right honorable and my most special frend,
Sir William Petre, Knight, one of the Kinges Majesties two Pryncipall Secretaryes.

MCCCLXIII. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to LISLE, PAGET, &c.¹

AFTER our most hartie commendations unto your good Lordships. Thies may be tadvertise you that the Kinges Majestie, having seen your letters and articles now of late sent hither, and understanding by the same all your proceedings at this your second meting, and sithens that tyme, taketh your proceedings in very good parte, and myndeth to send unto you His Majesties finall resolution touching the matters of your commission, with asmoche spede as may be, so framed, as we have good hope (except the faulte shall be notably overmoche of thother side) ther shall ensue good successe of your legation. Mary, His Majestie woold gladly have all thinges so digested, as the peax now to be agreed upon (yf it shall lyke Almighty God to bring the same to that good agreement), that no mater nor occasion of nue quarell or controversie shuld arrise hereafter. And therfore, bicause in tharticles sent unto you from the French Commissioners ther is mention of a ryver called Devre, which is set out for a limite of His Highnes frontiers; His Majestie having yet no certen knowlege, where the said ryver begynneth, and how it floweth and commeth in to the sees, neither can Himself well consider thovertures proponed, nor we of His Highnes Counsell, for want of knowlege therof, can be hable, nor dare give any advice therin: wherfore it shalbe necessary that your Lordships, signifieng thus moche to the Commissioners of thother parte, shall travell by suche good and gentle meanes, as you shall thinke most convenient, to cause the said ryver and other limittes to be so set furth, as upon your advertisement agayn bothe we may be the more hable to consider the mater, and so give our advises accordingly, as His Majestie may also by his most grave wisdom determyn His Highnes most gracious pleasure; which we have good hope to be returned to your Lordships agayn with all possible diligence, after your declaration therin. And, for the better doing therof, His Majestie thinketh it woold do well that you, M^r Secretary, with somme one of the French Commissioners, and suche others of bothe sydes as you shall thinke mete, did ryde and vieu the ronnyng of the sayd ryver. And, to thintent His Majestie woold playnly be informed of the said limittes, Sir Rychard Lee and Rogers be presently dispeched hens, to give their attendaunce upon you secretely in your said journey, who may after set furthe

the same in plat, and after Rogers to return to his charge of that syde, and Sir Rycherd Lee to bring the plat to His Highnes. But of thintent of making of this plat, you shall not nede to give any notice to thother side. And besides that, your Lordships shalbe more fully instructed of His Highnes pleasure by the said M^r Lee and Rogers, His Majestie wold us specially to remember unto you that, yf it shall comme to this agrement, it must be capitulated that the ryver with the further bankes, quatenus hibernus maximus fluctus excurrit, shalbe His Majesties; and that the hole haven and of thother syde at the mouth of the haven unto the forte of the high hill shall also be His Majesties. For otherwise the Frenchmen might fortifie upon the said hilles in the mouth of the haven, and by that mean take away from His Majestie thole use of the haven. And scing they be pleased that the town of Bulloyn shall quietly remayn in His Majesties possession, they will also lykewise agree, yf they mean good faith, that the haven, being an accessory to the town, shall also remayn accordingly.

Finally, His Majestie hath even now seen your letters¹, my Lord Admirall, touching the message of the French Admiral in the name of the Dolphyn; which message we assure you His Majestie did take very thankefully, and prayeth your Lordships so to declare to thAdmirall of Fraunce, signifieng further that His Majestie hath no lesse good will to a frendly conclusion of peax, then either his master or the Dolphyn have, and myndeth so to shew the same in dedes, as (except the faulte be overmoche in them) His Highnes trusteth thold frendship and amitie betwene His Majestie and the Frenche King may be renewed. Mary, it shalbe necessary that they have suche regard of His Majesties honour, as they woold have to their masters, in case like. And yf this agrement do follow in dede, His Majestie woold be most glad to se his godson the Dolphin, and use and enterteyn him as his own son, to whom He hath a speciall good affection, and giveth most hartie thanks for the keping of his doughter²; trusting that, yf they will come on frankely, he shall well fynde His Majestie will at all tymes be glad to shew Him a very father unto him, as any occasion may serve therunto. His Majestie requireth you to signifie, what you shall do touching the premisses, assone as you may, &^{ca}.

M^R PETER, with my most hartly commendacions. These may be to signifie unto you that even now I receyved your pacquet of letters here at Calais, and to morow entend, God willing, if I scape my fitt this nyght, to go to Guysnes, and in the meane tyme, until M^r Lee and Rogers cum, devise with my Lord Admyral and M^r Wootton, what is best to be done for the accomplishment of the Kinges Majesties pleasure toching the lymittes; wherein besides that which was written, it was forgotten in our last letters to be written (for I was wonderous ill at ease, lykeas I was this last nyght, and swonded twyse, and the wynd blowyth in such a quarter that all the labour lyith on my hand) that they sent woord by mowth, besides tharticles, that the ryver beyng the lymitt, reason woold it shuld be commyn. Which ryver is not called Devre, but it is the ryver which runyth by Devre, and Devre is the towne that we calle Daverne, standing on the other side of the ryver. For Monluc brought a plat with hym of Bullonoys, the fayrest that ever I saw, one of them, and the best sett furth. These lymittes wilbe all the huckyng, for therin they thought the French King woold moche stick; for if you have all on thisside the ryver, the French King can not cum from Devern to Ardre, but uppon your grownde. As toching the haven, I se no reason but that it shuld be the Kinges Majesties, and yet I thynk they will looke to have a suffrance for the comyng in thither of shippes to bring theyr thinges to theyr new fort. Lykewise toching fortification in the said hilles, Monluc was depely in hand with us last day (who is a very devill) to ceasse our fortifying at Hambletew; but, as my Lord Admyral can tell you, I stopped his mowth with reason. Mary, he semed to desyre that there shuld no more fortifications be newly comenced on nother syde. In these and suche other doubtes you must procure the Kinges Majesties pleasure, and also helpe there to devise and imagyn what doubtes may rise, and to send us resolutions for the same. For eles, beyng not nere the Kinges Majestie, where we myght fetch from tyme to tyme knowledge of his pleasure, it wilbe an infinite worke to send to and fro. And this French Admyrall, (who sayth his credit is moche about his maister, and may do many thinges besides his instructions by his own discretion) wilbe loth to tary long from his maisters elbow, for feare of sholdryng, which to ambitious men is allwayes in absence a great care. I could wish, I may tell it you, that my Lord of Hertford myght be at the conclusion of this matter, for the mo heddes the more wittes, and thinges myght the better be committed to our discretions, when we shalbe four togidres of the Kinges Majesties Privey Counsail. Mary, all men will not, I may tel you, lyke this devise; and therfor, if the Kinges Majestic shall so ordeyn, thadvertisement must be so couched from thens, as may seme to procede and take thoriginal of the Kinges Majestic. M^r Peter, thus I dare say, that the Kinges Majestic (as I have herd reaported by them that know the cuntrey, and by veu of the plat) shal have a goodly cuntrey, and a strong, if we myght ones make it our own clere, and that part beyond the water nothing nothing nothing lyke, neyther in goodnes nor gretnes, to that on thisside. And, will you here a fooles fantazy, I would wish that no woord wer mencioned of fortifying or not fortifying; for the Frenchmen now at the first tyme will not be overhasty in fortifying, and ere it be long, (I beleve, as verly as I do my crede) he will fall out with thEmperour, and than may you buyld, and do what you list, and he will not say nay, in myn opinion, but rather, peradventure, seeke or here meanes for the clere establishment of amite with you. I pray you let us here shortly from you, and so do I byd you most hartely well to fare. From Cales, the 18th of May, at 6 of the klok at nyghht, 1546.

Y^o own PAGET.

I had rather, then all that I have, this matter wer at a good ende, both for the satisfaction of the Kinges Majestic and of my self; for, sythens I cam hither, care and thought, with want of, have put me almost besides my self. M^r Peter, my folish opinion is, not to make all thing clere, as you write from thens, but leve them in obscuretes; for so shall we, if the money shuld be fered to be offred, have the mo and honester causes to pyke quereles.

MCCCLXV. LISLE, &c. to PETRE.

M^R PETER, in our harty maner we commend us unto you. Signifying unto the same, that beyng restrayned by the last letters from the Counsail to do any thing toching the lymyttes, until the cummyng hither of Sir Richard Lee and Rogers, and having nother ye, nor nay, wherwith to answer the French Admyral toching the contentation of the Kinges Majestie concernyng the articles lately sent thither, we fynd our selves moche perplexed. That, wherwith we feared in the Frenchmen, they now charge us withall, and say we seeke tyme to theyr hynderance, they desyring to have the matter ended, and we (they say) protracting the tyme. ThAdmyral hath charged us for breke of our promise, for that we have not this nyght answer at the furthest, beyng the fourth day, and the weder and passage fayre inowgh. He hath sent hither this day (by our faythes and trowthes) thrise, signifying that he knowyth his maisters mynde, which he wooll not declare, till we also be advertised of the Kinges Majesties pleasure; and in cace the same cum not by to morowe, as we tell hym it wooll, lookyng for it every howre, he will departe to Monstreul, for longer at Ardre he will not tary. For beyng there, he sayth, the towne is beseged, for that no victuales cummyth thither, leest we shuld think by his meanes the towne wer revictailed. If you thinke to have the Admyral tary the vieu of the contry, the makyng of a platt, the sending in to England, the returnyng of an answer, and so, as mo doubtles shall arrise of mo answers, it will not be. For Goddes sake, helpe to an answer, for it is tyme. I pray God we have not taryed to long. It is tyme, it is tyme, if that be trew, which this afternone we have herd from the campe, viz^t that all our armye is in mutynye one against another by meanes of the straungers¹, without whom we cannot warre, but by whom in the warre we ar undone, and no remedy present for the matter but peax. We have sent to the campe, and looke howerly for an answer, which is not yet cum. Such as it is, when it cummys, you shall here of it, and what it shall worke in the hed of our enemyes, when they shall here it; specially havynge all the power cum downe to Monstrel, that they can make, God knowyth, and we doubt moche, and the rather for that thAdmyral makyth such hast awaye.

¹ It appears from Hertford's despatches, that a serious mutiny broke out among the Almains, who were dissatisfied at the mode of calculating their pay. It was quelled, after six of them had been executed, and others banished.

If the Kinges Majestic be pleased with all the rest, the lymyttes be so certain, as they cannot fayle, the ryver is so well knowen. It cummys in to the valey besydes Devern, besydes Samer, to Pont de Brick, to Bulloyn, and so in to the see. Asfor the ryver, they will looke to have it comyn, both for fishing, for theyr mylles on the other syde therof, and for theyr vesseles to cum in and out. As for fortifying on the sandes, you may convenaunt that nother parte shall fortifye more then is alredy commenced. We could wish that every man wer as carefull for the peax, as we know is necessary at this tyme. We ar glad that you shall ease us there with the drawght of the treaty; but you must consider they will drawe the treaty to, and therfor if you shall cyther be to curious in termes (which is leest regarded amonges the most part of Pryncees in this world), or that we shall not have commission to worke thorowly with them without more sendyng, looke veryly to have all lye in the durt: and what will be the sequele, God knowyth. We looke veryly for answer from you on Fryday at nyght, and therfor, Mr Peter, we pray you do your diligence; for, as for our partes, we have discharged our selves both to God, our Soverayn, and our cuntrey. Fare you most hertly well. From Guysnes, the 19th of May at mydnyght, 1546.

Your most assured lovyng frendes,

(Signed) JOHN LISLE. WILLM PAGET. NICHOLAS WOTTON.

We use all the honest meanes we can to kepe the Admyral stil, unto we here from you, but we feare leest this mutyny in the camp will mar all.

MCCCLXVI. KING HENRY VIII. to LISLE, &c.¹

By the King.

RIGHT trustie and right welbiloved Cousen, and trustie and right welbiloved, We grete you well. And lat you witt, that having seen your sundry letters, and understanding by the same your earnest travaile, wise and diligent endeavour in the execution of the chardge committed unto you, We have thought good by these our letters to geve unto you our right hartie thankes for the same. And, to thentent your travaile maye growe to some shorte resolution, having considered tharticles delyvered unto you by the Commissioners on the other syde, We have caused certaine other conditions to be put in penne, so framed, as We doubt not, if they shall meane good faythe, and woll shewe themselves to have that earnest desire of peax that they pretende, you shall nowe in short tyme, and with fewe wordes, make an ende.

And, wher We do require by theise capitulations to have the holle ryver and tholle haven to be ours, with suche lymyttes as be mentioned in the said articles; albeit We thinke they canne have noo just cause to stycke at that poynt, considering that without those lymytes We canne scantly be well assured to contynue the quiet possession of that, which by theys pactes is agreed to remayn unto Us; yet, if they shall styck at the bondyng of the said lymytes, our pleasour is, that you shall remembre unto them first, that, the towne of Bolloyn being ours, the porte and haven depending of it ought allso of reason to be ours: seconde, that if the haven be left commen, they may comme with suche noombres of shippes and men in the same, and ther use doo and devise suche meanes and practiques, as maye tende to the sodayne suppriceng of the towne, or suche annoyaunce of the suertie of the same, as were neyther resonable, nor to be endured. They must consydre, you must tell them, that lyke as this contrey is agreed uppon to remayne in our possession during the tyme appointed in this treatie, so it is requysyte that all occasions be provyded for, that might put us in daungier of lesing the same, bfore the entier payment of that recompence which is promysed on their bihalf. And, seing We have on thoon syde clerely agreed to the redelyvery of the said towne and countie of Bollonoys, after suche sort as you maye see, wherin, for the love of christyan quietnes and desire of renovation of our old amitie with their maister, We have ben pleased to release moche of that We wold and might with our honour and reason have otherwise required; We must thinke, if they shall earnestly require to have any suche small corners remayne with them, which shall tende more to our unsuertie, and occasion of trouble, thenne to any commoditie for themselves, We must think they meane not to joyne with Us so assuredly and frendly, as they have pretended. And touching the haven, you maye tell them, that, being this amitie ones agreed uppon and establisshed, they maye then by curtesy obteyn thatt which by pact is nott now to be gawnted. You shall allso understande that, albeit We do send theis capitulations framed as a platt for your better instruction, knowing nevertheles your accustomed wisdoms and discretions, We canne be well pleased that you do altre and chaunge suche wordes termes and sentences of the same, as the Frenche Commissioners shall require, and you thinke requisyte, soo as the materiall poyntes and the mattiers of the said capitulations be in no wise ommytted. In which your treatie, if you shall comme to any finall agreement, We think expedyent that our Lieutenaunt shalbe also present with yow at the fynisshing and concluding of the same.

MCCCLXVII. PAGET to PETRE.¹

M^R PETER, with my most hartly commendacions. You shall understand that, havynge receyved the commyn letter from the Kinges Majestie for our proceedinges, and perceyving aswell by the same as by the forme of the treaty sent from thens, in what thinges His Majestie hath varied from tharticles, I have thought good to pray you alone, bycause my Lord Admyral and M^r Wootton be both abed and a slepe², when you shall aunswer our letter sent by M^r Lee, to signifie also His Highnes pleasure toching the furst payment, wherin I am sure they will make difficulte, for that they may not conveniently spare it, and also bycause in the generall accompt they reckon the pension viager, due now a yere and a haulf in May, as percel of the debt, wherof I sent you a cotype. There is nothing, which His Majestie desyreth to have, and so hath signified cyther in the letter or forme of treaty, but we wer moche to blame if we wold not do what we could to get it. Mary, if it shuld lyke His Majestie by the next letters to say "accorde uppon these condicions, or eles, if " they will departe, let them go ; or eles, get Me these condicions, if it be " possible, and if not then assay these, or these, and other wise agree not ;" it shuld be a good discharge for us. For, if His Majestie, furst proponyng these poyntes to se what may be gotten, myndyth, rather then fayle, to descend to others, it wer pytie that for our lack of knoweledge therof in tyme, this communication shuld breke, as undoubtably it is lyke; for this Admyral callyth stil apase for a resolut answer. If the matter wer to be treated by Ambassadors resident, it made no matter what tyme wer taken for it, and it wer well done to passe at leysure by degrees, and to se by litle and litle what may be gotten. But now it is not so: I meane for the tyme. For the degrees it doth wel, so the instruction cam in season. We pray you to answer us both to the poyntes of this letter, and of that which M^r Lee brought to day to the Kinges Majestie; and wheder, if that we agree uppon your next answer, we shall cause peax to be proclaymed here, if they think the same good, and that we shall know by conjecture our letters of our agrement to be arryved at the Court. We trust to have thanswer perfait from you in all thinges by Sonday at nyght, or Monday in the mornynge; and so to conclude a bargayn, or eles to cum our wayes. Monluc sent woord to my Lord Admyral that, in cace the peax be made, the French Admyral is lyke, or he returne to his maister, to cum over thither, and to kysse the Kinges Majesties hand. I hyd you most hertly well to fare. From Guysnes, at mydnyght, the 21th of May, 1546.

² Earlier in the day Lisle, Paget, and Wotton had written a joint despatch to the King, reporting that Monluc had been sent to expostulate with them on the delay, and to declare Annebaut's resolution to depart, if the King's answer did not arrive on that day or the morrow : and Paget in a private letter to Petre had urged him to send an answer by an express messenger, who would come from the Court to Dover in six or seven hours, whereas the common posts make ten or twelve, " whych may fortune to forslo a tyde or two, & so peraventure a day and nyght more than nedyth."

MCCCLXVIII. KING HENRY VIII. to LISLE, PAGET, &c.¹

RIGHT trusty and right welbeloved Cousin, and trusty and right welbeloved, We grete you well. And late you wit that, having seen your letters with the plat addressed unto Us by Sir Richard Lee, and undrestanding by the same aswel that the matier, not yet agreed uppon, resteth moch uppon the lymytes, as also to what resolution the French Commissioners, as it appereth, mynde finally to descende unto; wherein ye seme also desirous to knowe our pleasure :

pleasure: We have thought good to signifie unto you, if ye shal not be hable to bring them tagre to such lymytes, as be set fourth in our former instruction, Wee be pleased that you shal finally agree uppon the sayd lymytes as foloweth; butt, if you may possibly, yow shall please Us well to bring them to the lymittes signefyed by our former instructions, especially for the lymites of the haven.

First, that the havon be agreed uppon to be ours, so farre as the water overfloweth at the hiegh water of bothe sides from the see to Pont Brick.

Seconde, that from the Pont de Brick upward, the ryver cumming into the sayd haven shalbe the lymyte on thother side, and remayn commen unto Us and the French King, so as they neither doo ne attempte any thing in the sayd ryver, wherby the same may be turned any other waye from thaccustomed way by which it nowe renneth into the haven.

Thirdly, where they clayme three villages lyeng betwen the hed of the sayd ryver and Guisnez, for that, as they saye, they have as yet the possession of the same, ye shal declare unto them, that their possession (if any such be) hath been and is but precaria possessio, and such as rather hath been suffred of the contempt of our men, then otherwise enjoyed of any force; and seing We have (as they knowe) had possession of somme of their townes asfarre as Tyrwan, be nevertheles pleased nowe to departe with the same agayn, they cannot by any reason styk with Us at so smal a tryfle as thies three villages, thatteigneng wherof may be to our pale an occasion of somme unquietnes, and to them no commoditie. And, if they shal replie unto you agayn that those villages be necessary for the conduict of ther victailles, and for their waye to Ardre, We be also pleased, if they shal shewe themselves conformable in the residue, that by your discretion such parcel of grounde shalbe appointed unto them, wherby they may have an honest way by suffraunse, as one frynd hath with an other.

Ye must herin travail earnestly, and set forth unto them how moch We be pleased to remit of that We might otherwise reasonably require of them; and if, thinges beeng thus framed, they shal not shewe themselves nowe conformable, the worlde must thinke that they have not in dede (what soever they swere and pretend) mynded to deale frendly et bona fide with Us, and that the faulte of the contynuaunce of thies warres is only in their wilfulnes, and nothing at al in you, whatsoever hath been sayed by them in that behalf: remembring unto thAdmyrall (whom yow take to be a wise man) how moch the conclusion of this peax may be for the commen profyte of Christendom; and, although they shall perchaunce relent in some thinges,

to consider with all thatt We be pleased to doo the same in greater things, and thatt stycking in small may turn both Us and his master to such expenses as may perchaunce be hereafter repentyd, and yett they never lyke to come to so good conditions as they may now.

Finally, where they ar contented to covenante that, after the declaration of this peax, no newe fortification shalbe commenced of either side; We be also pleased ye shal assent on our behalf to the same, and put that also amonges your capitulations of this treatie accordingly.

MCCCLXIX. KING HENRY VIII. to LISLE, PAGET, &c.¹

RIGHT trusty &^{ca} We grete you well. Signefyeng unto you, that, albeit by such letters and instructions, as We have heretofore sent unto you, our pleasure be in all things so amply declared, as by consideration of the same with our letters yesterday depeched towards you for answere of yours sent by our trusty &^c Syr Richard Lee, you may not only be fully instructed in al things, but also declare such conformitie on our behalf, as (saving for the quiet of Christendom) We wolde not otherwise have assented unto; yet, undrestanding that ye reken they wil make some difficultie for the dayes of the fyrst payement, We have thought good to signefy unto you that doing asmuch, as ye possibly may, tenduce them tagre uppon the day of the first payement accordeng to our former instruction, you shal in thende finally, if they wil by no meanes assent therunto, agree uppon the fyrst payement to be made the first of November next ensueng, according to ther own offer, and so from tyme to tyme accordeng to the treatie. And if you shal in thende agre uppon a peax, our Lieutenant being then with yow, as Wee have hertofor appoynted he shuld, our pleasure is, that after the same shalbe put in penne and sealed by the Commissioners, sending Us worde therof befor, ye doo, within twoo dayes after the sayd agreement, cause the peax to be openly proclamed on that side. And, in the finisheng of your capitulations, We be pleased that, wayeng and considereng theeffectes and material poyntes of them, from the which We wold you shuld not varye, you doo in other smaller matiers alter the termes or tempre the same, as ye shal thinke reasonable, and may be best to their satisfaction. Finally, where Munluc hath sayed that thAdmyral is lyke to come over to Us, this peax beeng concluded ; if you shal here him cast out any such wordes, ye may saye, that ye be wel assured he shalbe right hartely welcome unto Us.

MCCCLXX. LISLE, &c. to KING HENRY VIII.

SIR. To declare unto Your Majestie the circumstaunce of our communication yesterdaye, with the wilfulnes (saving the majesty of a King) eyther of the French King or of his ministres, and their desperate dealing in this treatye, it wer to tedious to Your Majestie to here. And we assure Your Majestie that, consydering how franckly, godly, and reasonably Your Majestie did procedde with them in every thing, almoost after theyr own willes, it greved us not a litle. In the furst article, touching the 8th yere for the payment of the money, they swarved from us, and wold nedes make us beleve it was ment that, if they woold paye the money at any tyme within the sayd 8 yere. that Your Majesty must receive it, and delivre Boulloyn. Also, in the limittes, and in every other point, they brake, and sayde that their maister woold in no wise accorde to any of them: wherin we stack. As touching the Scottes, and the grosse somme of money ; that they woold agree upon, as tharticles bare. So, Sir, we departed desperatly, saving that the President desyred us to consydre the mater, and to let them knowe in the morning, wheder for the sayd terme of 8 yeres, or within 8 yeres at any tyme, and for the ryver and haven to be commyn, and for the furst payment to be at Michaelmas, we woold accord or no. We sent them woord this mornyng by this bearer, even as we aunswered yesterdaye, that we woold not tel them what we woold do, but article by article ; that is to say, that when we had told them our mynd in the furst article, they shuld aunswor, wheder they woold agree to the same or no ; which if they did, we woold talk of the next, and so from article to article. Wherunto they accorded, and so Francesco having commission to set furth our mindes in every article, even as we had don the day before, after long reasonyng with them, brought them to graunt to the furst article for the payment to be made at Michaelmas, which shuld be in anno 1554. But when he cam to tharticles for the limittes, and the furst payment, they woold in no wise agree, and so sent with him Monluc to commyn the mater with us ; whom we despeched with like aunswer, in dede sumwhat repentyng afterwarde, seing we had attempted them therin thrise alredy, and consydering the wilfulnes of our part adverse, might have been

cause of their own undoyng and our trouble. And, as he was going to horseback, being induced by this bringer to retourn, and assaye, wheder he could bring us to any better appointement, he cam back agayn to talke of the mater with us. And for the haven, if we woold nedes have it ours, he woold it to extende no higher then a litle above the toun, and so forward, the water to be commyn. At the last, Sir, he accorded the haven to be yours from the see to Pont Brick, and on both sydes to the high water marke, so as, for such thinges of the King theyr maister, as they shuld bring in to the furniture of theyr fort, they shuld pay no gabelle, but their marchauntes and all other thinges to pay custume et tolle and other droictes to Your Majestye, and from Pont de Brick forward the water to be commyn. Wherunto, Sir, we have accorded, and likewise for the furst payment to begynne at Novembre, for they alledge it not reasonable they shuld paye it twice, which in that cace they say they shuld (and say trouth), paing it ones in the grosse somme. And, where by an article in the treatye they may cum in to all your portes, and your subgectes in to theirs, so as they entre not at one tyme above hundred armed men at a tyme; they asked us, wheder, if having warre with an other Prince, cyther for savegard, or upon sum occasion of tempest, they shuld not for souccours entre, but be cyther taken or perishe; we aunswered that we woold not be uncourtoys, but by frendship they shuld entre, so they descended not without licence. Wherewith he was satisfyed, saing they hope to fynde asmoch frendship at our hande, as they do now at thEmpereurs, to whose comprehension, Sir, in such forme as You have prescribed, they woold not but with moch ado agre; but woold have had Him barely comprehended; but at the last they have accorded to it, and I, Mr Wootton, and the President, shall to morow and the next daye make up the writtinges, and uppon Thursdaye we think they shalbe sealed.

To morow I, Sir William Paget, and Bochetel, accompaigned with others, appoynt to go to the waters hed, and to see all the limittes of Boullonnoys from thens hitherwarde. The Frenchmen woold fayn have devised the wayes for the payment and deliverye of Boulloyn, but that we differre to medle therin, saying we shall have tyme ynoughe for that herafter, and we say that there can be no reasonable meanes devised therefor at this present; hereafter it shalbe better. It hath ben thought expedyent to agree upon an abstinence for four or 5 dayes¹ both by see and land, whiles the maters be in pennyng,

penning, lest by sum souldyours, whose lyving is by warre, sum such occasion might fortune to be gyven, upon one syde or other, as peraventure might marre all. Assone as we shall have sealed the writting, the same shalbe sent to Your Majestie, beseching Your Highnes moost humbly at your feet to be our good and gracious Lord, and of your great benignite and clemency to pardon, what shall have ben don not fully according to your desyre, which if we woold not have accomplished to thuttermoost of our powers, God confounde us, and sende us your indignation in this woorld, and His condemnation in the woorld to cum. This honest witty gentleman¹ can enforme Your Majestie of all the circumstances, to whom we do commit the full reaport therof to Your Majestie, for that by experience we have seen asmoche desyre in him to serve Your Majestye as in our selves; and therefor, upon our knees, besech Your Majestye to let him knowe, that Your Majestie hath ben enformed of his good service, and that Your Majestie taketh it graciously and thankfully. For, in good faith, Sir, we think, if this man had not ben with us to tempre these Frenchmen, the Devil woold have made them to marre all, they have such a naturel pryde in them; but now we must gyve it an honester terme, and call it a gret courage. Our Lord God send Your good Majestye His peax here in this woorld, and hereafter with Him in Heven perpetuelly. From Guisnes, the 24th of May 1546.

subsequent despatch of the same day that he had reduced this truce to three days. By a letter from the Privy Council of the 26th he was ordered "to grawnt the abstinence for as many dayes, " as thAmbassadours have or shall assent unto, for His Majeste thinketh nott good, thatt for any " small maters this towardnes of a good agreement should be empeched." This letter also contained the following directions:

" And touching your being att the conclusion of the peax, His Highnes, considering thatt the " French Kinges Lieutenant is also in the feld, and nott present att this treatye, thinketh it more " honorable for your Lordship to be absent from the sayd conclusion, then to be ther; and thatt " yow doo send them word thatt, lyke as the French Lieutenant being in these partes, hath att no " tyme byn present att this treatye, nor myndeth to be att the conclusion, thatt yow mynd also to " contynue abowt thoversight of your charge withowt being there, so as all thinges may be con- " cludyd by those who have taken payn in debating of the same."

¹ This person appears by a letter of the same date from Paget to Petre to be Francisco Bernardo. In this letter Paget suggests that the Master of the Horse (Sir Antony Browne) and Mr. Wotton should be sent to congratulate the French King on the peace, or some other personage meet to remain as Ambassador resident.

MCCCLXXI. KING HENRY VIII. *to LISLE, PAGET, &c.*¹

RIGHT trusty &c. And late you wit that this afternone arryved here Francisco Bernerdo with your letters, by whom and your said letters We doo at good lenght undrestande your earnest travailles, wise and diligent good dexterities, about the execution of the charge committed by Us unto you. All which We take in good parte, and yeve unto you our right harty thanks for the same. And bicause it hath been signefyed by the sayd Bernardo unto Us that, in case We shuld appoynt yow, our Admyrall, to go into Fraunce with our ratification, and for christening of the Dolphines daughtour, the French Admyral shal come over to visit Us, who, if he come, (We think) shall bring the King his maisters ratification also with hym, We have thought good, if the sayd French Admyral shal so comme in deed, tappoynte you, our Admyral, to goo to the French King with our ratification of the sayd treatie, and to be in our stede at the christening of the Daulphines daughter, and in your cumpany, M^r Doctour Wotton, to reside as our Ambassadour for a tyme there; wherof lykeas We have thought good to gyve you notice beforehande, to thintent you maye prepare and furnishe yourselfes for the same, so We mynde, before the tyme of your departing, to sende you full instructions with a more ample declaration of our pleasure for your proceedings, as shal apperteyn. And, assone as your treatie shalbe fully agreed uppon, and sealed, and thAdmyral departed from you, our pleasure is that you, our Secretary, shal repayre to Us. And, in cace their Admyral doo immediatly from thens repayre hither, you, our Admyral, takeng M^r Wotton with you, may also put yourself in ordre to passe towards the French King from thens; otherwise, if the French Admyral shal fyrst goo to his maister, you may also, at his departure thens, repayre hither accordingly.

And in case yow shall perceyve thatt the French Admyrall shall nott come over unto Us, then We wyll that yow doo advertise Us therof with all diligence, to thintent We may appoynt such one other for the sayd christening and ratification, as We shall think convenient; in which case We would yow shall ensarch, as nyer as yow can, whom the French King myndeth to send hither, to thintent We also appoynt one other lyke personage on our behalf.

MCCCLXXII. KING HENRY VIII. to LISLE, PAGET, &c.¹

RIGHT trusty and right welbeloved, and trusty and welbeloved, Wee grete yow well. And wher We have heretofore signefyed our pleasure unto yow, thatt Wee wer pleased yow shuld convenaunt with the Frenche Commissioners thatt, after the declaration of this peax, no nue fortification shall be commenced of eythar side; having now, sythens thatt tyme, considered thatt mater with Our self, We can see no reason, why We shuld be so bound for our parte, for Wee think thatt they have non occasion, why they shuld bynd Us not to fortifye, seing thatt Wee have none other suertye, butt the suer keping of our cowntrey ther, tyll the tyme of delyveraunce. And for ther part Wee think they shuld be bownd nott to fortifye any nue fortifications, according to the pact, bycause they shuld leave our cowntrey quyetyly unto Us unto the tyme agreed uppon; att which tyme the fortifications and all in Bullonoye shall be theirs. And therfor We desire yow to travayl, as yernestly as you may, to procure some moderation of this poynt, and to obteyn thatt Wee may have lybertie to fortifye within the cowntree remayning with Us at our pleasure, for the suer keping of the same, seing they give Us none other pledge. For the better conducing wherof to good purpose yow may doo your best, and also use Francisco Bernardo to joyne with yow as a minister, who (Wee doubt nott) wyll shew hym self well wylling to ferthar the same to the best of his power. And in case yow can obteyn thatt by no meanes, Wee think good yow doo assay, whethar yow may induce them to be contentyd that Wee shall except any one place within ther frontyers, in the which they shall begyn no new fortification, leaving them full libertie to fortifye in all other places att ther willes. Wherunto if yow may induce them to assent, We be pleased yow shall promyse the lyke on our behalf agayn, thatt, they excepting any one place within our lymittes, We may fortifye in all other partes of the same. And, if yow shall be hable to bring them to agree to eythar of the sayd conditions, yow shall (We assure yow) mynister right thankefull pleasure unto Us, and yett, rather then yow shuld break of for this poynt, Wee be pleased (if yow can bring them to no other conformitie) thatt yow shall finally in thend agree, according to our former instructions and letters heretofor addressed unto yow in thatt behalf.

MCCCLXXIII. LISLE, PAGET, &c. to PETRE.

M^R PETRE, with moost hartye commendations. Thies shalbe to signifye unto youe that, like as we be, and wer, as we wrote by Signor Francesco, agreed of the principall poinctes, so have we had a great controversye for the hed of the ryver. We have no man in the woorld, which can enforme us any thing, but ar fayn to here them, what they will saye in it. The ryver hath six branches or springes, and if you aske any of the pesantes, which is the hed, they will saye it hath foure or fyve heddes. As I, the Secretary, wrote this other daye, I and Bochetel went to see the hedd, but such a hed as liked him to shewe. I had in my cumpany the Treasurer of Calays¹, the Surveyour of Calays², Sir Henry Paulmer, Broke the Baillif of Guisnes, Personne Haull, two of M^r Wallops best guydes, and two auncient men of Calays, and not one of these knew one ynche more thenne I knew of the ryver, for the hed. I was led so long through maresses and wooddes, that I thought myself mocked; and at the last even fel out with Bochetel, and Jehan de Poco who was his principall guyde, and told them plainly that they mocked me; and so returned back home in a gret colour, as wise as I went furth. They woold have us fayn to clayme no further then to that part of the ryver, where the same receiveth furst his name, and is called Lyene³, which wer thre Englishe myle out of the Kinges waye at the leest; but where soever the hed of the ryver be, Seelles⁴ is clere without it. For the next day we sent Sir Henry Paulmer, the Surveyour of Calays, Parson Haull, with one or two of the best guydes we could gett, to go vieu all the springes, and to make a just platt therof, and of the cuntrey thereabouts. Wherupon yesternight we had with the President and Bochetel a great dispute, and for that and an other poynt we wer like to breke all; for they woold have an article put in to the treatye that the Kinges Majestye shuld suffre thold owners of the landes to return, ech man to his home, and the same shuld be sworn his subgetes for the tyme His Majestie hold Boulloyn, and paye to Him all droictes rightes and rentes. To the which we will in no wise agree, but wil rather laye all in the durt, except the Kinges Majestie commaunde the contrarye. Mary, this we saye, that we think we shall have nede to admitt sum of them agayn to cultife the land, and that we suppose such making sute to the Kinges Majestie with such submission as aforesayde, and upon such condition of rentes as shall like His Majestie, may be admitted. Mary, to say that we will bynde His Majestie to it by convenaunt, we wil in no wise. And as for the ryvers hed, we stand to that yet, which is moost for His Majesties advauntage, they offring an other wherby we shuld lose a village called Lottingham¹, which in that cart that Rogers brought we think be not truely sett. In this poynt we stande to this, that all Boullonnoys, to the further shore at the highest water mark of the haven (accepting the haven to Pont Bricq, and on thissyde the ryver from Pont Bricq unto the hed and fontayn of the same ryver, must be His Majesties, and this is the best limit can be made, for otherwise they might appoint us what they wouold, and saye this wer or that wer not Boullonnoys. How beit we saye this. They convenaunt to leave His Majestie all Boullonnoys on thissyde the water from the hed of the water to Pont Bricq, and beyond Pont Bricq to the see from the further syde of the water. Wherefor, if they will kepe any from His Majestie dolo malo, they shall not kepe convenaunt, and they may blame themselves if any thing shuld fortune otherwise then they wouold. Thus we sail to and fro, and if they ende not the mater with us to morowe, we have told them plainly we will breke, and upon Saturdaye every man to stande upon his gardes. For the hed of the water they make all the sticking, not for any profet they shall have of the thing, no more shall the Kinges Majestye, the ground being no great mater, and but a village or twoo, not worth thre halfpens, as the Surveyour telleth us, and such other as with him viewed the same. Mary, it is all togidre for their passage to Ardre, in which point, rather then fayle, we will folow our instructions in that part, and point them out a waye by discretion and advise of counsail. Brunenberghe², which (what hed soever we take) shalbe the Kinges Majesties, hath ben a prety pyle, worth thre of Seelles; but both of them soo ruynated, as it maketh no mater who have them, for their goodnes, and the moch the les mater for that it is convenaunted nother part shall fortifye, but thinges alredy begon. For the which purpose, upon my Lord of Hertfordes enformation, what a necessary place to be fortified the hil, where the Maister of the Horses lay, is, we gave him advise to begyn sumthing there, which hereafter at a convenient tyme might be perfaicted.

and by me, thAdmyral, by see; for surely we will not agree to the restitution of the Frenchmen to theyr landes by no meanes, except the Kinges Majesties commaundement. And therefore that point being nothing concerning the maters, wherupon all the controversye was, if they wil nedes presse us therin, we entende to breke, if the Kinges Majestie sende us not contrary commaundement, rather then to yelde so moch to these wilfull beastes, and we trust that God shall helpe His Majestie, seing the fault is not in Him. And for our partes, whereas His Majestie hath opinion that sum of us ar fearefull &c., His Majestie shalbe assured that sithens the fault resteth in them so manifestly, my feare of the sequele of thinges shalbe taken awaye. And conceyving a certayn and a fast hope of Godes helpe, we will shewe ourselves, ech in his degree, men of stomack, and devise all the wayes we can to be revenged of these prowde false and unfaithfull nation. Signor Francesco is now arryved here, moch abashed with these nouveltyes. Howbeit he hath good hope, he sayth, to work thinges to sum better perfection. The man hath told us howmoch His Majestie hath shewed his grace unto him, for the which we thank His Majestie upon our knees moost humbly. And thus praying you to procure thaunswer herof, we bidde you moost hartly well to fare. From Calays, the 27th of May, at night.

Your moost assured loving freendes,

To our assured loving freend, Sir William Petre, Knight, oone of the Kinges Majesties two Principall Secretarys.

MCCCLXXIV. LISLE, PAGET, &c. to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEAS it Your moost excellent Majestye to be advertised, that besides the doubttes touching the receiving again of thinhabitauntes of Boullonnoys, and for the limittes, wherof we wrote unto M^r Petre to enforme Your Majestye of the same, having sithens both we and Bernardo travailed divers tymes to thuttermoost of our powers with the French Commissioners to leave out of convenaunt the sayd restitution of the inhabitauntes, and also had divers assemblies for the pennynge of thother poinctes, wherupon we ar agreed; We

fynde the President and the Secretary so farre out of square, and so faced with sophistical devises, as cyther we must breke of, oreles agree to that which we nother ought to do in respect of our duetyes to Your Majestie, nor yet can fynd in our hartes to do it by any maner of reason.

In the article for their payment of the twoo millions, they woold it shuld be expressed that, having it redy to be payed to Your Majestic, it shuld be taken for payed, if you accept it not whenne they offre it; and in that pact, whereby Your Majesty convenaunteth to delivre Boulloyn &c., they will have added You shall delivre Boulloyn &c; in the same point it is now or better, in such sorte as they shall think better, bicaus that may seame good to Your Majesty, which shall not bee good to them. And in the same article, where it is added Youe shall rendre Boulloyn &c. they paying the money and keping all other convenauntes of that treaty, they will nedes have added that, when You shall think that they breke any article, then Your Majestic shall admonishe them of it within 6 monethes after; for eles they saye, if Your Majestic shall think nowe they breke any convenaunt, You may kepe it in store and chardge them withall 7 yere after. And as for tharticle, which they requyre to have now made, they proponed such a facion as (to saye our opinions to Your Majestye with humble submission) Your Majestic may not well agree unto it, allthough they woold agree to all the rest, even at Your Majesties will. For they woold not only have the lay people restored, but also all the religious, and to suffred so to contynue; and they set furth that article so at length in particularites, that it is shame to here them speke in it. They woold have the people to make othe of fidelite to Your Majesty with reservation of theyr personall othes of allegeance to the French King, bringing for example the restitution of thEmpereurs subgettes in the Baillifwyk of Heding. And, finally, they woold have the treaty ratifyed, not only by the writtinges of both Princes, but also by their othes. To write unto Your Majestic, what ado we have had with them about this penning, how unreasonable men we finde them, how inconstant, to day one, to morow an other, what cavillations they use, what doubtes they putt, we ar half ashamed; and yet be they nothing ashamed thus to use themselves. If we chardge them with theyr consent to tharticles, which we sent to both Princes, they aunswer that they deny not the same. Mary, say they, those articles wer but capita, and requyre an esclarcissement. And thus ar we tourmoyled, no les with this esclarcissement, then with another heretofore in another place. And touching the comprehension of thEmpereur, they will not agre to any other article, saving this generalite to be used, that thEmpereur be comprehended for Your Majesties

part in like sort, as thEmpereur comprehended Your Majestie in his treaty with them.

This morning we sent Signor Francesco to know absolutely what they would do. Wherupon this after none cam hither the President, the Secretary, and Monluc; and, after long debates chidinges and brawlinges, they have altered and chaunged the sayd articles in to such forme, as Your Majestie shall perceive by a cōpye of the same, which wē sende herewith¹, wherin, Sir, in our opinions with submission of the same to your moost excellent wisdom, there is no gret variation from the substance of that, that is in Your Majesties forme sent hither, except tharticle for receyving of thinhabitauntes; wherin, Your Majestie determining by your moost grave prudence what your pleasure shalbe, we shall ensue the same according to our moost bounden dueties. When they cam to the putting in of this article, we utterly refused it. Wherunto they sayd, they would not perswade us to agre therunto, seing we sayd we had no commission. Mary, they would requyre us to put it in, to thintent Your Majestie might see it, and then they doubt not Your Majestie would not stande so moch against it, as we do. But stil we stode in our refusal. Wherupon, they sayd, if we would breke after this sort, the peax being so nere at a poynt, they would chardge us therefor both before God and Your Majestie, “for we see there can ensue no danger to the King “ your maister for the same, for we beleve veryly that non of the gentlemen,

The Treaty, as ultimately concluded on the 7th of June, is printed by Rymer, Vol. XV. p. 93., and in Recueil des Traitez, Tom. II. p. 239.

“ and few of the other people, will cum to dwell there, what so ever we “ provide for them; albeit, if they do cum, yet may you use them in such “ sort, as eyther they shalbe glad to go theyr way and leave all, oreles you

 “ very shames sake; oreles the woorld will speke to moch dishoneste of our “ maister; and we doubt not but that the Kinges Majestie your maister will “ use the Kinges our maister, in this cace, even as He wold be contented to “ be used Himself. And therefor we pray you to advertise Him of it. His “ Highnes may make such aunswer therin, as shall like Him.” Wheruppon we have thought to sende the same with the rest, remitting the condemnation or accepting therof to Your moost excellent wisdom, moost humbly beseching Your Majestie to interprete, after your accustomed benignite, our good meaning to serve Your Majestie both in this and all other thinges to the best of our power, though peradventure our wittes and knoweledge shall not be correspondent to our good willes. Thus we beseche Almighty God to preserve Your moost excellent Majestie in moost prosperous and long lief, with victory over all your ennemyes. From Guysnes, the 29th of May¹, at midnight.

MCCCLXXV. WOTTON to PETRE.¹

Syr, after hertye recommendacions. I have not written unto yow all this whyle, for that M^r Secretarye Paget hath largelye advertysed yow of all owr procedinges heere. And other maters have I none to wryte of; nor at this tyme wolde I wryte enye thinge therof, but that I see M^r Secretarye so busyed, that I doubte whether he shall have leysur to wryte to yow heereof. Emonge menye greate controversyes, maynteynidde often tymes usque ad convicia, the whiche we have hadde heere with owr frendes the Frenche menne, one that yet remaynithe undecydidde, is this; yn tharticle of the restytucyon of Boleyn we saye that all tharticulations of this treatye observidde on theyr parte, and the two millyons payed accordinge to the treatye, Boleyn shall be redelyveridde unto theym. This clause², (I maye saye to yow) chawfidde not onelye the Secretarye Bouchetel (who is soone chawfidde), but also the Presydent Remon, yea, and Mons^r thAdmyrall hym selfe, the coldest of theym all; so that not onelye it made theym looke with Cherubins faces, but also to baptyse and name the chylde with menye propre names. Summe tymes it was baptysidde the unreasonableste clawse that ever was herde of. An other tyme it was baptysidde the moste captiouse clause (the which yow know well cowde not be spoken but of a lawer) that cowde be devysydde: with menye other suche preatye names. And fynallye it was sayde, that therebye might evidentlye appere that, though we entendidde to take theyr money, yet nothings was lesse meanidde by us then to make restitution of Boleyn; so that fynallie they requyre to have that clause stryken owte, for they saye that, standing that clause, yf they shulde perchawnce offende, not onelye against enye of tharticles of importance, and moste specyallie and distinctelye expressidd, but allso against enye of the generall articles, wheryn they maye lightelye offende, and not peraventure consyder it (as it is not facile to observe exactelye generall articles, how circumspectelye so ever they be lookidde upon) yea, and that yn the first yere of this treatye made; yet might we receyve yerelye for these 8 yeres theyr money, and at the 8 yeres ende, when they shulde offer to paye theyr two myllions, we might saye that they had broken the leage 7 yeres before, and therefor oughte not to redelyver theym Boleyn; and so shulde we keepe Boleyn and theyr money, payed during the sayde 8 yeres to; so that they conclude that yn no meanes they maye consent to this clawse, but requyre to have it lefte owte. Yf I shulde wryte heere, what hath ben answeridde hereunto, and what persuasions have ben made on bothe sydes for it, I must staye heere the bearer heereof one tyde longer. But this is theyr resolucion, that that clause must owte, yf this treatye shall be concludidde; as it shall appeere unto yow by tharticles now sent to the Kinges Majestie. And how be it that peradventure they maye by muche yntreatye be inducidde to suffer summe of the princypall articles of the treatye to be expressidde yn the steede of the sayde generall clawse, as, yf that the Scottes gyve new occasyons, and that after that, they assiste the Scottes; or yf they make enye new fortificacion contrarye to this treatye, or paye not theyr money at the termes apoyntidde, or offende yn certeyn other lyke thinges, as maye be expressidde, then the Kinges Majestie shall not be bownden to make restitution of Boleyn: yet yn my simple mynde, yf we maye not have the generall clawse insertidde, it wer as goode to have the hole omittedde, as to have a few notable cases (the which they wille not fayle to observe, or yf they do not, yet shall it be so done, that it shall not be knowne) namelye expressidde. And, though ther be nothing otherwyse therof expressidde, yet do I take it that yn enye treatye, frangenti fidem fides frangatur eidem, yn what article so ever it be. Neverthelesse, forbicause that this article is of greate importance, I praye yow to consyder it your owne selfe, and lette us know your mynde yn it, whether of bothe is beste: at the leaste yf the Kinges Majestie be contentidde that the generall clawse be lefte owte.

Also owr sayde frendes the Frenche menne ar nothing pleasidde, that we ar so earnest to have owr frende thEmperour comprysidde yn this treatye; but fynallye, lyke as they ar not content with tharticle sent us from the Kinges Majestye, so with muche a do they ar pleasidd that thEmperour shall be comprysidde under that selfe fourme and maner that the Kinges Majestie was comprysidde yn the last treatye made betwixte thEmperour and the Frenche Kinge. Yow wolde peradventure saye that that is the thinge, that we do requyre. You wille gyve me leave to be playne with yow: it is the thinge yn deede that I wolde requyre, for I wold paye

thEmperour with the selfe coyne, that He hathe forgidde. But yet yn deede it agreithe not with tharticle that the Kinges Majestie sent us, for they affirme constantelye that yn tharticle of the Kinges Majesties comprehension, betwixte thEmperour and the Frenche Kinge, besydes that that was delyveridde me for a true cotype of tharticle, and afterward was shewedde to my Lordes of Hereforde and Winchester, sealidde and signedde, these wordes yn effecte ar conteynidde yn it, "as farre as the leage betwixte the " Kinges Majestie and thEmperour wer not derogatorye nor prejudicyall to " the sayde leage betwixte thEmperour and the Frenche Kinge." And this these Frenche menne so earnestelye saye to be true, that I stande halfe yn doubte, whether thEmperours ministers have usidde theyr accustomidde playnenesse and faithfulnessse yn the delyverey of the sayde article unto me. And, at my late beinge at Arde withe the Frenche Commissyoners, they shewidde me a cotype of a letter decyfridde, the which they saye was a letter sent theym from the Chauncelour of Fraunce, wherof parte I redde, conteyninge the comprehension of the Kinges Majestye yn the treatye betwixte theym and thEmperour; wheryn the clause that they speake of was conteynidde. And yn the margent was written an apostille of this effecte, " these very selfe wordes ar expressedde yn tharticle of the comprehension " of the Kinge of England made yn the laste treatye betwixte us and " France." And therefor, yf there wer no wyser menne yn the world then I, tharticle shulde passe as they requyre it, and as it is now sent over to the Kinges Majestie. But though I am bolde to show yow my fantasye yn it, yet I doubte not but that the mater shall be so wayed at home as it requyrithe.

Also, where as the Kinges Majesties pleasur is that, this peace takinge effecte, I shulde departe hence with my Lorde Admyrall ynto France, I shall requyre yow first to consyder, what shorte wareninge I hadde to come hither, and that I have heere neither that nombre of servantes, nor horses, nor stuffe, nor money, nor enye thinge elis, that is necessarye for me, for suche a journey. Nor, being dayelie occupied as I am, and having so shorte a space prefixedde unto me, I canne by no meanes prepare my selfe for it. And, having consideridde these thinges with your selfe, yf yow fynde theym reasonable, as I mistruste not but yow wille, I hertelye beseeche yow to declare these consyderacions to the Kinges Majestie, to thintent that, yf His Majestie be fullye determynidde that I shall go this journey, that yet it maye please His Majestie to gyve me leave to come home first for a few dayes, to prepare my selfe, and to putte summe order yn myne owne pryvate busynesses, busynesses, the which ar yn suche case, that I am now ashamidde of it. For, emonges other thinges, I assure yow that, sithe my laste comminge home, by the meanes of my longe sykenesse, I never made rekeninge yet with enye one that hath hadde enye doinge for me yn myne absence. And it seemith to me that, seing my Lorde Admyrall goithe thither, it shall not be requysyte, that the Kinges Majestie sende enye other thither, specyallye tyll the tyme that the Frenche Kinge sende an Embassadour resydent ynto England. And, how be it that I have heeryn summe respecte to myne owne pryvate affaires, yet I promisse yow, on my faithe, that that movithe me nothings so muche, as that, yf I shall take my journey hence, it is not possible for me to go so as shal be enye thing honorable for the Kinges Majestie. Wherfor I praye yow to helpe, yf neede shall be, that I maye come home first for a whyle, yn cace His Majestie determyne that I shall nedes go this journey; wheryn yow shall do me singuler pleaser. As knowith our Lorde, Who preserve yow longe yn helthe and prosperite. Written yn haste at Guisnes, the 29th of May, 1546.

MCCCLXXVI. Articles divised for a consultation to be had with th^ERLE of HERTFORDE, the Kinges Majestes Lieutenaunt in the parties of Fraunce, and the LORDE ADMYRAL, and either of them, by the BUSHOPE of WINCHESTRE and the MASTER OF THE HORSE, whome the KINGES HIEGHNES now sendith thither for that purpose.¹

F^URSTE, to consider with them the state We stande in, touching the treatie with the Frenchemen, and what is lastely resolved concerning the same.

¹ From a minute, corrected by Petre, and indorsed, "Minute of my Lord of Winchester and the " Mr of tHorses articles, p^mo Junij, 1546."

Paget in a letter to Petre of the 3d states that the coming of Gardyner and Brown had caused surprise at Guisnes, and that he and his colleagues think their mission a month sooner would have been of more service.

Item,

Item, to consider the nombre, state, and condition of tharmye there, and also on the see, and of our garrisons, and how sone the same may be furnished with money, victuailes, supplement of men, and other necessities; and also how the saide Lord Lieutenaunte thinketh beste to employ the same.

Item, what vitales shuld be requisite for the saide nombre, and what wante there is thereof.

Item, to consider where the saide Lord Lieutenaunte shuld lye with tharmye, and how the same might be furnished with vitales conveniently, withoute the danger of disfurniture of Bulloin; and whither Boulloyn be hable to receive, bake, and brewe, that that shuld serve for an armye, besides their owne necessite.

Item, to consider the state of Bulloin, and other our peaces, for their present furniture of vytailes and other necessaryes.

Item, whither it were not good policie to take in heye and wodde into Bullon, and the other fortes, with all possible diligence, and the same well furnished with men, victuailes, and other necessities, to leave the feeld to the ennemyes for the reste of this yeare, which We think can be no dishonour to Us, seing We have fully atchyved the thinges We sent our armye for.

Item, how many men shalbe mete to be lefte in eache fortresse for the sure defence of the same.

Item, how in suche case the Almaignes and Spanyardes may ther, or elswer, be lefte employed, or dismissed and discharged.

Item, what shalbe thought best to be doone for the furnytüre and order of the see matters, and whither it shalbe mete to have any of the small peaces to attende specially at Bulloigne, Calays, Hambletue, &c.

Item, in case We conclude nat this peax, that my Lord Lieutenaunte do destroy the 3 villages, that Wee shuld have hadde by this treaty, in which they bragg they have kept all this while during the warre, with asmuche besides, as he conveniently maye, which shuld be to the comodite of thennemye.

Item, to put in wryting their resolution uppon every of theis articles, and such others as to ther discretions shall be thought requisite for the furthuraunce and suertye of our affayres, and to subscribe the same.

RIGHT trustie and right welbeloved, and trustie and right welbeloved, We grete you well. And late you wite, that We have seen your letters, addressed unto Us by this bearer, togethers with suche capitulations as the French Ambassadors delivered unto you, so unreasonably framed in sundry pointes, as it may appere manifestly by the same, that they have in this treatie rather meant to winne tyme by ther accustomed maner of practises, then to conclude bona fide that which they have pretended, going about to wyn from us by crafte and frawde those thinges which by sworde and force they nether be, nor ever shall (We trust) be, hable to recover. Neverthelesse upon the perusing of their articles We have yet ones agayn devised others; in the penning wherof, lyke as in sundry pointes We have byn pleased to yelde to their desires, so in somme other pointes We have omitted certen partes of their said articles, and altred somme other partes to more reasonable condicions, as by the said articles², which We at this present do send unto you, you shall perceyve at more length. Before the opening of which articles unto them our pleasure is, you shall first declare the great unreasonableness of their requestes touching the restitution of thold owners and inhabitauntes of Bullonoys, and touching their devise for the use of the haven, wherein besides those considerations, which We have caused to be put

¹ From a minute corrected by Petre, slightly mutilated in the centre of each page. It has no indorsement remaining, but the minute of the articles accompanying it fixes it's true date to be the 2d of June. The despatch appears from the answer to have been written in cypher.

² These are the articles above alluded to. They are also corrected by Petre, and are indorsed, "Copie of tharticles of the treatie sent from hens ij^o Junij, 1546." They differ considerably from the articles mentioned in the note to p. 185. The substituted article runs thus: "Quod si placuerit Serenissimo Anglie Regi acceptare aliquos agricultores aut alios inhabitantes dicti Comitatus Boloniensis ad rursus inhabitandum ibidem, quod bene liceat et licebit eidem Serenissimo Anglie Regi, ejusve heredibus et successoribus, eosdem ad inhabitandum infra dictum Comitatum admittere et acceptare, sub illis tamen conditionibus que dicto Serenissimo Anglie Regi expedire et utiles esse videbuntur, et quod eisdem agricultoribus et alijs inhabitantibus ibidem inhabitare et commorari et juramentum fidelitatis dicto Serenissimo Regi prestare liceat, presenti tractatu in aliquo non obstante, quodque ijdem agricultores sive inhabitantes inde non expellentur, cum dictus Comitatus Boloniensis ad manus prefati Christianissimi Regis pervenerit juxta tenorem hujus tractatus."

in penne, and do send unto you herewith¹, you may also adde suche others as you shall thinke expedient; declaring and shewing unto them, how moche they have byn addicte to their own willes against all reason, from the

"left out.

"Fyrst, bicause this article was not written amonges those which the Frenche Commissioners first proponed and were sent unto His Majeste. And where they saye that the first were but capita, it must be aunswered that in those capita this pointe is not touched, but rather contrary to them.

"Secondly, that they offered by their sayd first articles that His Majeste shuld enjoye Boloyne with parte of Bolonoys agreed upon, quietly, to His Hieghnes oune use, which cannot stande with the request to have every owner and other olde inhabitant restored agayn to his former possession.

"Thirdly, that His Majeste having noone other pledge for the surety of his debt, it is resonable that He shuld have the town and countrey so to remayn, as His Majeste might for the tyme be assured of the quiet keping and sure possession of the same.

"Fourthely, it is to be considered that if tholde owners shuld be suffred, especially the lordes and men of havour, to have agayn their landes in lyke sorte as they had before, they might not only put His Majeste often tymes in greate daunger of His Hieghnes peces, but, in cace of any breche, shuld be redy to victual His Hieghnes ennemyes, to gyve intelligences, so as by occasion therof the Frenchemen shuld not only be ayded with victualles, but His Hieghnes oune peces defrauded of the victualles groweng within the lymytes of the sayd countrey.

"Fiftely, that by as good reason as they wolde come to inhabite the countrey, they maye also require to be admitted to inhabite the townes of Hiegh and Base Boloyne, and such other peces as His Majeste hath sithens that tyme fortifyed; and the wordes of their articles, as they be generally couched, doo purporte the same.

"Sixtely, if the sayd owners and others shuld be restored as they have required, thole commodity and profit of the countrey shuld therby be holy taken from His Majeste, and no commodity profit or advauntage remayn to His Hieghnes or any His Graces subjectes, towardes the charges of the keping of the sayde peces, or relief of His Majestes sayd power subjectes.

"Thies considerations declare also that their requestes to paye no custumes nor other droictes for their cumming to the haven, is lykewise most unresonable; for seeng the haven remayneth His Majestes by agreement, reason wolde that al the commodities of the haven shuld also remayn to His Hieghnes use accordingly, and so consequently the custume and other droictes, lykeas His Majeste hath in other portes of His Majestes domynyons. And, seeing the haven is His Majestes, reason wolde, that noone other nor greter nombre of men or ships shulde at any tyme come into the same, then maye stande with the suretie of His Majestes peces. Wherfore it shalbe resonable to have the nombres of men so tempered, as hath alwayes been accustomed for other His Majestes havens, in other treaties.

"It is also to be tolde them that, if they wolde waye thinges by reason and not by will, they must confesse that the Kinges Majeste hath alredy graunted more then reason unto them. For by this pacte His Majestie possesseth only that which He hath alredy gotten and justly holdeth, without pledge or suretie but only this bare covenannt; wheras they, keping still by the same, bayarde in the stable, that is, two millions and demi, which they must paye at eight yeres ende to His Hieghnes, shal have the restitution of that they desire, without further daunger losse or expences; which if they shuld attempte to recover otherwise, shuld cost them perceace more money then shall by al meanes be payed to His Majeste; and yet when they had doon their best, with the sufferance of many losses daungers and inconveniences, goo clerely without it."

beginning in this treatie; how moche We have byn pleased to relent to their satisfaction, almost in all thinges, for the good of Christendom and sparing of theffusion of cristen blood; and now, thinges being so nyer a good conclusion, let them consider, whether it be expedient, for their masters affayres and their own estate, to breke the towardnes of this amitie betwene two suche Princes for a fewe paysantes, or other suche mens causes as they now sticke uppon. And here travell, asmoche as you may, to bring them to agree to the former instructions heretofore sent unto you; wherunto yf they will by no meanes assent nor agree unto, then our pleasure is, that you shall say, as of yourself, that you ar sory to se thies thinges frame after this sorte; and bycause you have byn ministers so long in this affayre, you would be glad to se the same conduced to a better conclusion, and therfore require them to devise yet ones agayne; and so (ye may say) you will do also. And so, after promise made to that effecte, you may then, as of your selves, shew thies articles, and say, that being desirous to se soome good ende of this long treatie, you have yet ones agayn devised more reasonable condicions, then may with indifferency be required. Wherunto yf they will assent uppon sight of the same, We be very well pleased you shall conclude a peax with them. Otherwise, if you shall se that they will by no meanes assent therunto, bycause by thies their proceedings it appereth manifestly that they meane nothing lesse than to conclude a peax in dede, We thinke it very expedient for our affayres, for sundry respectes, that, by your good policies and wise handling, some suche meanes were used; as, this treatie [being] differred for a while, We may in the meane season wyn so moche tyme, as our thinges, aswell for the sees as otherwayes, may be put in order to mete with them in all eventes. For which purpose We mynde to take suche spedy and substanciall order, as shall appertayn. And, for the better mean to conduce this to good purpose, We thinke it shalbe very well, that you, as of yourselves, shewing thies our said capitulations unto them, do require to have the same sent to their maister, from Whom you doubt not (ye may say) to receyve a more reasonable answer, then you have receyved at their handes; and seing you have at their desires sent their capitulations unto Us, you thinke they woll not denye to shew you the lyke gratuitie agayn, in sending of your articles to the French King; wherof (you may beare them in hand) you looke undoubtedly for good successe, seing thinges be reduced to so narrow poinctes as they be, and so many thinges remitted and yelded unto on our behalf as have byn. But yf, before any sending, they will perchaunce agree with you upon tharticles, which We do now send unto you, you must consider before the full ending of this mater, that the ryver from Pont de Bricke to the hed of the same, and the hed itself, be more certainly set furth then they wer by their capitulations, and that the [limittes] also from the hed of the said ryver to Guysnes be lykewyse set furthe by good and sure bondes and limittes. For which purpose, yf you shall agree so farre, our pleasure is, you shall send for Rogers our servaunt to peruse thole of the said limittes, and to make a plat therof to be sent unto Us, wherby we may the more certainly se what portion of ground is appoincted to remayn with us accordingly.

As for the comprehension of thEmperour, tharticle, which we do now send unto you touching his comprehension, is framed after lyke sorte as thEmperour comprehended Us in his late treatie with Fraunce, as appeareth by the copie of the said treatie, whiche We have of thEmperours delivery. And, where the French Commissioners have affirmed unto you, that ther be more woordes in the said comprehension then appere in our copie, you may tell them that at the late being of thAdmirall, Chauncellour, and Bochetel¹ with thEmperour, the sayd Bochetel¹ then said openly to our Ambassadors, in the presence also of divers of thEmperours Counsell, that thEmperour woold by no meanes agree with them without a full and speciall comprehension [of us]. And therefore seing He then affirmed so, We must thinke that our comprehension was and is after the lyke sorte as He then said, and as We have also byn advertysed other wayes. Neverthelesse, yf they, whom We take to be men of honour, shall send Us the very true and hole copie of that clause of the comprehension, as it is conceyved in dede, subscribed with their handes, We may be induced the better to credite the same, and procede thereafter accordingly.

Finally, yf the French Commissioners will not assent to any of your requestes aforesaid, but wilfully mynd to breake of, because in their late conference with you upon thies matters they have sayd that, yf the peax shuld now breake of, being brought to so narrow poinctes, they woold charge you, before God and Us, for the same; you may tel them agayn, that yf now they shall, as they have hytherto, continue their wilfulnes, and will allow nothing for reason, but that which shall procede from themselves, they must thinke to go as they came, and withall consider that they shall never have so moche reason offred agayn at our handes, wherof they may be well assured. And, yf thinges shall not now comme to an ende, We having in so many thinges followed their desires, you must and will (as the trouth is) declare [unto] the woorld, that their only obstinacie and wilfull proceedinges be the cause therof. And in this case you may tell them playnly and roundly also, that the comming of their men to our frontiers, and the staying of all the hulkes and other preparation to the sees, sithens the commencement of this treatie, make declaration to the worlde what good faith they have ment at this tyme; wherof lyke as We have had continually certen knowlege, so have We, and shall also more amply by the grace of God, provide for the same accordingly.

And in this case of their obstinate and wilfull breakyng of, our pleasure is that you, our Admirall, returning first to your charge upon the sees, and setting suche order in the same as shall be requisite, do, after order given there, return to our presence for a fewe dayes according to your desires, and you, our Secretary and M^r Wotton, to return to Us immediatly upon your breaking of, with diligence.

MCCCLXXVIII. CARNE to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

PLEASYTH yt your moste honorable Lordshipes. Whereas M^r Dymoke, the Kinges Majesties Agent, beinge at Dorte, was apprehended there by thofficers, and brought to prison, the 24th of the laste, by the commandement of the Procurator Generall of Hullande; for whose release M^r Vaughan¹ wrote to me to be a meane to the Lady Regent here. The furst of thys I spake with the Presydent Schore therin, and was ernyst with hym for his deliverance, for that the sayde M^r Dymoke was the Kinges Majesties Agent, havinge greate charges upon his handes of His Majesties, and of grete importunance. The sayde Presydent sayde, that truthe hyt ys that oone, namyng hymself there to bee the Kinges Majesties Agent, which (he sayde) ys thEmperours subject, beinge borne at Andwarpe, ys taken and in pryson at the sayde Dorte, for wordes that hee spake, as he sayde, in summum dedecus Cesaree Majestatis, whiche (he sayde) yf thEmperor harde wolde grevously exasperat Hym, specially to be spoken by any subject of hys. Wherof he sayde there be information sent hyther to the Quene here from the sayde Procurator Generall of Hullande, and other that wer there then present, whiche (he sayde) the Quene here hadd not them seen. I tolde hym, that I was sure that Maister Dymoke was boeth the Kinges Majesties servant and Agent in thooese parties, and that his dwellinge ys in London, and taken for an Englishe man. And yet, I sayde, that I doubted not but that the Kinges Majestie wolde no lesse omytt the punnyshment of any of his subjects, that shulde speake slanderously of thEmperors Majestie, then thEmperor wolde any of his subjectes to be ponyshed, incase they shulde speake unsemlye wordes of the Kinges Majestie. But, forasmoche as M^r Dymoke ys the Kinges Majesties Agent, I prayde hym to move the Quene here, that She and hyr Counsaile wolde have hyt in that regarde, as the Kinges Majestie wolde have any Agentes of thEmperors, yf Hee werr in Englande; and prayde hym that I might knowe what wordes be enformed that hee shulde speeke. Who sayde, that he coulde not opene them, tyll the Quene here hadd seen the information; and sayde, that the wordes bee suche as thEmperors eares coulde not abyde the heringe of them. Then, forasmoche as I hadd no information, but in generall, to labor for hys delyverance, and therfor coulde entre no spetialties with hym, I sayde that Dort ys a towne of great drynkinge, and that emongst the cuppes sume wordes might bee spoken, and not so evyll as hyt ys enformede, and prayed hym, in the beatinge of the matier with the Quene, to consyder and waye all partes; and that I might have an answer as spedely as might bee, to thintent to signyfie the same to the Kinges Majestie. He sayde that he thought the drynke to be a great doer, when the wordes wer spooken, and that hee wolde doo what he might conveniently, and therof I shulde have an answer.

Then I was in hande with hym to knowe, when M^r Reade and I shulde visytt the regesters of their customes. Hee sayde they warr redye. I tolde hym that wee boeth war redy lyekwyse to visyt them, yf we might knowe where and when. Well, sayde hee, there shalbe an order takyn in hyt.

This mornyng the Lady Regent sent to me to my lodgyng Mons^r Nygry, Chauncelor of thOrder here, with thys message, that, where I hadd sent unto Hyr by the Presydent for the delyverance of oone John Dymoke presoner in Dorte, and worthely takyn for hys mysorder ageynst thEmperor, (hee sayde) who had spooken such wordes that requyred no lesse ponyshment than deeth, spetially in reportinge thEmperors doynges, affirmyng Hym to have doen naughtly in settinge forth such bookes and makinge suche proclamations as Hee haeth don, in suche sorte that the wordes can not be harde here in his dominions; for the which wordes, hee sayde, yf hee hadd

byn takyn in any place out of the towne of Dorte, hee had byn decapitat owt of hande, without any taryinge: neverthelesse, for asmoche as hee ys the Kinges Majesties Agent, She and hyre Counsaile haeth, for the Kinges Majesties contemplation, resolved that he shalbe delyvered out of prison without any ponyshment for thys tyme, upon thys condition, that hee shall not tarry within thys countrie, but depart immediatly after hys delyverance herehens; for, yf he maye bee takyn hereafter, he shalbe in danger of hys lyef. And this was the Quenes pleasure, that hee shulde declare unto me. I tolde hym that, forasmoche as She hadd regarde to that he was the Kinges Majesties Agent, and that for his sake hee shulde bee delyvered out of pryson, I wolde signyfye unto His Majestic hyr good inclination therin. Neverthelesse, I sayde, that hee hadd great doinges for the Kinges Majestic in thoese parties, and that hyt war very grevouse to banysh him in that sorte, that he myght not serve His Majestic therin. Hee sayde the Kinges Majestic may fynde enoghe that will serve Hym. I sayde, thogh He might, yet He must consyder that the sayde Dymoke haeth entrede divers waightly bargens for the Kyng, wherin another, newe commynge, shalbe very rawe. And further I sayde I hadd information from hym, and that hee wolde referr the tryall therof to thoese that wer present all the dynner while, where the wordes be pretended to bee spoken, that the Procurator Generall moved hym of thre questions, which hee made answer unto, upon condition that all shulde be lefft under borde. And in that communication the sayde Procurator Generall, and other there, spacke worse wordes ageynst the Kinges Majestic then the sayde Dymoke spake ageynst thEmperor, and I trusted the Quenes Majestic wolde rather ponysh them for theyr unsemy and sklanderous wordes, then ponysh him, which spake not so lewdlye of thEmperor, as they dyd of the Kinges Majestic. Hee sayde that myn information camme but a reo, and the Quene hadd information of indyferent men, and such, that, yf hyt wer not for the Kinges Majesties sake, hee shulde leese hys heade. Neverthelesse hee sayde, “yf you wull have hym to abyde the tryall of hyt, “you may, but hee shall not owt of pryson the meane season, and I ensure “youe,” hee sayde, “he shulde be indanger of hys lyef.” Then I sayde, that I wolde not forsake the Quene ys offere for hys delyverance out of pryson, trustinge that hereafter, beinge at lybertye, he may fynde the meane to clere hym self of thooese thinges pretended agenst hym, and take patiens the meane season. Prayinge hym that the Quene wolde dyrecte hyr letters for his expedition out of pryson, and that he might have some leysor to put his thinges in order there, seing no better can be had at this tyme here. Hee sayde sayde She wold dyrect hyre letters for his expedition owt of hande, and that hee shulde have 4^{or} or 5 dayes, or hee departed, to put his thinges in order. This ys the resolution of the Counsaile here ; and other I can not get of them.

I was in hande with the Chauncelor to knowe when M^r Reede and I shulde visyt their regesters. Hee sayde that Doctor Hermes¹, hys college, ys not here, and tyll he comme nothings coude be doen. A Fryday last the sayde Chauncelor camme to M^r Reede and me, declaringe that somme of the tolleners war comme, and somme war not, but lokyd for dayly. And as for regesters, hee sayde they had no formale regesters, as he thought, but certen olde wrytinges, which wold declare the contentes therof to be true and antient thinges. For alwayes the toll haeth byn put to ferme in thiese countries, and therfor he thought formale regesters wer not made. Neverthelesse hee sayde wee shulde see ynoghe to content us. Wee sayde that wee wolde gladly peruse suche as they hadd, that they might be wayede accordingly, and that we thought hyt longe that hyt were not in hande. Hee sayde, “the Quene and the Counsaile departith this evenynge “ to Nyvell, for to meyte with the States of Brabant there, and will retorne to “ morowe night, and upon my returne (God willinge) wee shall goo in hande “ boeth with the bookes of toll, and your subjectes particuler complayntes.” Nevertheles the Quene and the Counsaile taryed forth tyll yesterday ageynst dynner tyme. Immediatly after dynner I went to the Presydent, as I have above written. I can perceyve no greate hast they make to visyt their bookes, though M^r Reede and I dayly call upon hyt, but saye hyt shalbe doen, without assignynge us any tyme when.²

This mornynge I receyved a cople of a letter that M^r Dymoke hadd sent to M^r Vaughan, conteynynge, as hee saythe, the hoole communication that he hadd the tyme of the dyner, where he shulde speke the wordes pretended in his accusation, which M^r Vaughan dyd sende to me for myn instruction, whiche copy your Lordships shall receive herewith, that you may perceve what communication M^r Dymoke sayth was betwixt hym and hys accusers ; whiche I thought good to sende to your Lordships.³

“And then dyd the Procurar say, ‘I praye youe, under the rosse, dothe your master holde ‘nothyng of the Pope, nor none of hys?’ I tolde hym ‘no’; and then asked he me, yf I dyd reken yt well done? and I sayde ‘yea’; and the sayde Procurar dyd aske, ‘What do youe esteime in ‘Englande that the Pope is?’ I told hym that we thowght Hym to be a Bysshopp, and a ruler in his cowntre, and so our master supream and head of his Realme. Whereunto the Procurar answered and sayde, ‘That wyll make your mayster have a warme tayle in tyme to ‘come.’ Also he asked, ‘Dothe not your mayster geve bulles and pardons?’ with dyvers other injurys. So that past over, and I desyred them to here no more suche communicacion. Wherunto was answered, ‘all muste remayne under the rosse.’ But yet one dyd begyn a newe matter, so that I spake these wordes, ‘Well, be youe content, for I durst lay a waygere that ‘your mayster, thEmperour, yf He lyve, wold do as the Kinges Majeste my master has don.’ Whereunto the Baylyffe sayde, ‘What! that thEmperour shulde be an heretycke, as your ‘master ys’? Wherwith I was not content, but I desyred hym to be content, or els I shulde be constrayned to writt to the Kynges Cownsaylle, and more over I sayde, ‘yf the ‘Kynges Majeste be an heretycke, then dosse thEmperour and his Cownsayle verye evyll ‘to treate with Hym of love and perpetuall amytie, as the Prynces has byn tyll thys ‘present, and shalle contynewe, for all your sayenges and myne.’ Wherunto the Baylyffe answered, ‘hyt ys trewe that thEmperour our mayster has made a newe traycte betwene ‘the Kynge your mayster, and not to be an heretycke, but for other purposys.’ So that then I dyd saye, ‘Well, whosoever do make a peace or treate with a Turke, he ys also a ‘Turcke, and for as muche as your master ys in love and favour with my master, and youe ‘name Hym to be an heretycke, then ys your master as myne ys.’ Wherupon the Procurar awnswared, ‘well, let this passe; let all be dronken under fotte, and remayne under the rosse.’ So did they drynke themselves droncke, but they being in feare by lyklyod that I shulde writt of hyt home, and so have they the nexst daye fetched me owt, with 10 men, and caryed me owt of myn ostes howse like a traytour or a thefe, and wold suffer no man to come at me. But I do fynde the lordes of the towne of Dorte verye good unto me, and they wold not suffer the Procurar Generall for to carye me here hense, so that he ys gone to the Hage, for to se whether that he can fynde some waye for to have me thether; for his testimony, which he dyd truste upon, do not testifie as he hade thought that they wold. For I have for me 2 very honest men of this towne, which do know, and testyfie, as I wryte to youe, and more in my favour: and thys ys true, so helpe me God. And this letter I have written be stealeth, desyringe yow to writte to my wyffe twoe or thre wordes, that I ame owt of pryson, and that I am goen to Brame, or elles shee wold tak hyt hevely. As knows God, Whom preserve yow and fare yow hartelye well. Written at Dorte, the 26th daye of Maye, 1546.

MCCCLXXIX. LISLE, PAGET, &c. to KING HENRY VIII.

IT maye pleas Your mooste excellent Majeste to be advertised that Wednisdaye all daye, and yesterdaye till Signor Francisco his arrivall, the French Commissioners kept continuall watche here for his retorn again. About nyne of the clock in the morning the sayd Francisco delivered to hus Your Majestes mooste gracious lettres, with all suche other writinges as were addressed unto hus from the same. About one of the clock after dynner came unto us Bochetel, oon of the French Commissioners, accompanied with Monluc,

Monluc, from the Admiral and the President. The effect of his arrand was to knowe, what answer we wold now make uppon this retorn of Francisco unto their articles delivered unto us ; sayeng that Mons^r lAdmiral wold tary no longar, and therefore desired us to send the answer, goode or bad. We sayd in dede Francisco was cumme, and for werynes layd hym down to repose him self, and that siche lettres and writings as he had brought unto us were in cyphre, so as we could not well declare unto him yet the meaning of the same : that daye we wold travayle to put thinges in order, and as this daye, if they wold mete us at the place accustomed, they shuld know what we wold saye unto their articles. “Nay,” quod Bochetel, “we have met oft ynough ; and, except the answere that you will make to us be agreable to our articles, Mons^r lAdmiral bad me shewe you he wold mete no more, and so you know it was sayd at our last meting, being sory that he had taried so long ; and therefore I require you, on Mons^r lAdmirales behalf, lett me know a resolute answere in this matier.” And here we tooke occasion to fall into a littill colere, alleging that the falt of this tarieng rested in them, for we told them at our last meting that the Kinges Majestie our maister wold not like those articles. And, after that they were sent by their desire, I, the Secretary, told Bocheteles clerc, cummyng to me in an arrand from his maister, that I thought summe of them so far unreasonabil, as I beleved veryly the Kinges Majeste wold in no wise accept them. And here Bochetel tooke uppon him to defend the reasonabilnes of them, and we to prove the contrary, with siche reasons as Your Majestie hathe sent to us, and others the best we could devise. And so, after many wordes used on both sydes, they sayd they wold depart, and tell the Admirall the answer that we had given them. Wherof we were glad for the tyme to be ryd of them, and so they departyd.

After supper arrived here from Arde the Admiralles Secretary, and declaryd unto us that his maister, marvailing myche, what we ment by this, and siche other dilayes that we had used, prayed us to send him a resolute answer to their articles, and if we wold not, to perdone him, tho he departyd the next morow ; alleging, besides other causes of his departure, that the next morow our saveconduyct expired. At the whiche we tooke hold, and let the rest passe, sayeng, the saveconduyct might be renewed for a longar daye. Whereunto he answeyrd that the Admiral bad hym saye that, onles we shuld agre, it were foly to tary any longar ; and styll pressed us for the answer. Whereupon, Sire, considering that, in omnem eventum, Your Majestes pleasure was, we shuld wyne tyme, and doubting myche their wilfulnes to depart, if we shuld not have approched to them sumwhat nearer, we thought it best to answeere them, that we were in devising reasonabil meanes for bothe partes, whiche we wold as this daye send unto them; not doubting but, if they had ment goode fayeth, and mynded a quietnes and peace betwene the two Princes, they shuld be siche, as they wold imbrasse the same. Wherwith he departyd.

In this meane seasson we sent unto Your Majesties camp, to know whether my Lord of Winchester and Maister Browne were cumme or no; meaning by them to have had summe knowlege of Your Majesties pleasure touching the blanc¹ in your last articles, and also for their opinion what we shuld answer, if the Frenche men shuld require an article for ratification. For whereas, Sire, Your Majestes pleasure ys, we shuld sett forth thies articles as of our own devise (and so in dede we have), if we cumme to talke with them uppon the poinctes, and that they shall presse us for that article, either shall we be dryven to yeld to them to agre uppon summe forme of an article, for that there was never treaty yet, but that it was ratified; or elles we must confesse that we have all this while talked of a thing which Your Majeste will not ratify. And, if we agre uppon an article (as in dede we have devised oon, suche as might salve Your Majestes conscience well ynough), then shuld we offend Your Majeste, which hathe prescribed unto us in this last lettre such a certen and direct forme of our proceeding at this tyme, as we maye not digresse one ynche fro the same: and as whereby the liberte of discretion given to us by your former letters ys from us clearly taken awaye; if we confesse, for want of sufficient answer, that Your Majeste myndeth not to ratify that that we have treatyd uppon all this while; we doubt how myche Your Majestes honour shalbe touched therin. For, asfor our poore honestes, it makith no matter; we passe not of it, nor of our lyves, to do Your Majestic service. And therefore, Sire, what face so ever we sett on the matter for a meeting, we have thought best to use dilayes therin, and rather to talke particularly with them, then in any commune assemble, untill either by Your Majestes letters, or by the Bussshop of Winchester and Maister Brown, we maye know sumwhat of Your Majesties pleasure in this behalf, and also for the blanc in the article of fortifications. In whiche poinct, Sire,

we think that Your Majestie hath not been fully informyd of the trouth; for my Lord of Herford hath this morning sent us word, that he knowith of no newe fortification made by them, saving only a newe braye about their fort, which they have begoon long agoo, and ys, as they take it, the same self fort, lyke as Your Majestie doothe repute, what so ever you buyld betwene Bulloin and the Old Man to be of the fort of Bulloin.

This morning at the openyng of the gates, the Admiralles Secretary was here to know our answer, and also to require us, in cas we were disposed to commune any further with him, to renewe the saveconduyct for a cople of dayes. The whiche we sayd we wold do, and longar if they wold; but, asfor our answer, we could not yet make, it was not thorowly devised: and in this sort dispeched him awaye, intending to have woon all this daye cleare, if we had could, and also summe part of to morowe, ere that we did speake with them. And for this purpose we sent Signor Francisco to Arde, aswell to debate with them the unreasonablenes of summe of their demandes, as also to put of this daye according to our determination. But all this wouold not serve, for again they sent, and wold nedes have our answer resolutely. Wherupon we sent unto them a coppie of the articles in the same forme sent to us from Your Majestie, with this message, that we then sent them our reasonabil devise, according to our promise over evenyng, and that this was le dernier sacrament, as they saye: imbrasse it, if they wouold; and, if they did refuce it at this present, they wer never like to cumme to the semblable again.

Sire, for all the dilayes that we could make, hither came to hus this afternoon the President, the Secretary, and Monluc; and so we fell toguether, summe tyme to reasoning, sum tyme to chydying, and almooste came to defiance; and in the end, Sire, we are cumme to this point, that, if Your Majeste think this reasonabill, that we shall now write, you maye have a peace.

First, in the 12th article they desier to have that left out, which Your Majeste shall fynd underlyned; the which they saye is neyther honorabill for You nor for them; and for your advantage to put in those wordes, the which You shall fynd in the margin, or suche lyke.¹

Secundly,

¹ A draft of the articles of the treaty from the 9th to the end was transmitted with this letter. In the 12th article the words in the margin here alluded to are, "una cum ipso portu Boloniensi, ac omnibus utilitatibus, juribus, commoditatibus, emolumentis, et proficuis ejusdem portus," which it will be seen on reference to the treaty in Rymer, &c. form part of the article as finally agreed on. The words underlined, and proposed to be left out, followed the word "satisfecerint," which

Secundly, they desier also, seing Your Majeste will not agre to that that they desier toching thinhabitantes, to leave out the 15th article clean¹, and so they saye they do agre to that that was first accordyd in the first articles.

Thirdely, they do accord unto your article for the Emperour, and desier that they maye also putt in article for theyr parte.²

Fourtely, they saye that by tharticle for comprehension of the Scottes, made at Westmynster in the yeare 1515³, they be bound to give the Scottes knowlege within a fortynight, the which they saye now is impossible, they having noon Ambassadors in England, and the treaty being made here, and therfore they desier now a monthes space to advertise the Scottes of their comprehension.⁴

Fivetely, they desier this treaty maye be confirmed within 30 or 40 dayes, as it shall pleas Your Majestic ; but of the forme of the ratification they sayed nothing.

Sixtely, for the article of fortification, they charg us with our agreement to a forme in that behalf; whiche, Sire, Your Majestic leaving to our discretion, and signifyeng only unto us You were contentyd to agre that neyther part shuld forfeite, but that was already begoon, we must confesse to Your Majestic we did agre in that forme, which Your Majestic shall receive herwith.⁵ Sins the which agreement made, booth Your Majesties folkes have fortified in newe places, and theirs also; they at St Estiennes (they saye), tho my Lord of Herford know it not, and Your Majesties folkes at the Maister of the Horses camp and at the Black Nestes. Wherefore they saye tharticle is as reasonabill for You as for them; and, if Your Majestic will except the Maister of the Horses camp, they will except St Estiennes; or if Your Majestic will make tharticle that such fortifications may be perfectyd, as were begoon before the

which is now the concluding word of the 12th article, and are as follow: "Id autem conventum et conclusum est, quod dictus Christianissimus Rex, heredes et successores sui, ac eorum subditi, naves suas onerarias, rebus suis necessarijs onustas, cum suis nautis, modo uno tempore numerum centum armatorum nautarum sive vectorum non excedant, in dictum portum Boloniensem trans-mittere licebit, et eo accedere, quibus libera et quieta appulsio non denegabitur, modo se pacifice et honeste gesserint, ac omnia onera agnoverint et solverint, que in alijs Angliæ portibusolvere consueverunt, et ex hujus federis conventionem prestare tenentur."

² Both these appear in the treaty, following the 14th article.

³ Rymer, Vol. XIII. p. 487.

⁵ This form is added at the end of the articles transmitted, and constitutes the 14th article as it now appears in the treaty.

first of Maye, then shall tharticles be made bona fide on both sydes, they saye. Uppon this article they charge us myche with our agrement, and saye it is not reason, that we shuld do that, which we will not lett them doo; desiring that indifferency maye be used in the same. Uppon this article, Sire, is all their great sticking. Wherfore, Sire, to morowe we the Admirall and Secretary doo go to the camp to speake therin with my Lord of Herford, to feele his opinion in the same, beseching nevertheles Your Majestie to determyn the matter there certainly, or elles that it maye like You to give us authorite to determyn in that point, as my Lord of Hereford and we shall agree. Had it not been, Sire, for this article of fortification, and for want of knowlege of your pleasure touching the ratification, we had to morowe signed and sealed You a peace. For they will by no meanes, that we could woorke, signify any more unto their maister, tyll they have either mard or made a peace; sayeng, if we do refuse to graunt them this, whiche they now speak of, we never mynded to make peace with them, but to delude them, and wyne tyme of them, alleging here the long dilayes, which they saye we used for answers out of England. In their desyer, Sire, a longar tyme to advertise the Scottes, we canne not tell how we shall saye them naye in reason, nor yet for their article to comprehend the Emperour. Asfor tharticle of ratification, we wot not what to saye to it, being a thing used in all maner of treatyes, and Your Majestie already bound to it by our commission. Asfor the amende-ment of the 12th article, and the putting out of the 15th, we ghesse that, rather then fayle, they will lett them aloon as they be, and yet, Sire, we beseche You lett us know your pleasure to those two articles, if paraventure they will not let them be as they be. And now, Sire, we see no great matters wherupon to styck.

Asfor the head of the ryver, and the limites hiderward, if they will deceyve You in the use therof, Your Majestie hath a quarell alwayes in stoore to use against them at your pleasure; and yet they offer, when we have made the peace, to determyn the matter in a true and upright sort, with such as Your Majestie shall apoint for that purpose. We have promised them a perfect answer on Sundaye at night, or Mundaye in the morning, or elles they wold now have left of all; and how that wold have liked Your Majestie, seing they be now sumwhat reasonabill, we doubt. Wherfore, Sire, if it shall like You to make the peace, we beseche You to lett us know your pleasure, by that tyme, how we shall use our selves in thies littill scrupules. If this peace like not Your Majestie for suche respectes peradventure as be knownen to your great wisdom, and unknownen to our foolishe heades, your will be doon, Sire,

Sire, in all thinges, and we shall mooste gladly and obediently indeavour our selves to the accomplishment of the same; beseeching Your Majestie moost humbly to accept in mooste gracious part our goode meanyng, and true hartes unto You; and not to beleve no more then we doo, tho the French men be cumme to this conformite, that the thing is perfect, untill You see their handes and their seales at the same, but to procede in your mooste wise and grave provisions in omnem eventum, in suche sort, as maye advance best Your Majesties affaires, in cas they shuld breake. And thus we beseeche our Lord to send Your Majestie moost prosperously and long to reign. From Guisnes, the 4th of June, at night, 1546.

Postscript. Sire, we had almost negligently forgotton to recommend unto Your Majestie this honest gentilman Signor Francisco, who we do assure Your Majestie, of our duties to You, hath evermore syns the begynnyng of this matter, and this daye specially, shewid him self as myche desirous to serve Your Majestie, as ever we sawe man.

as He shall here eyther of peax or warre to succeade betwixt us and Fraunce, the bruyte wherof commythe hither dayly, but chongeable as the wether; woon day the peax is made, and we shalhave mony, and Bullen shalbe restored; and a great nombre here sory when they here this newis of peax; but I pray dayly, as I am wont to singe at masse ("pax vobis"), so yt may be to the Kinges Majesties honour and contentation. A nother day the fame is, that all is broken of, and you gone, re infecta, and that the Frenchemen hathe, after theyr accustomed fynes, revytaled Ardres, and their newe fortres by Bollen, and thus make you lose this yere; and hereat am I sory.

Yesterday (yt was the Feste of the Ascention) thEmperour accompanied with the Kinge of Romayns and other Princes that be here, excepte the Duke of Bavare (who taried at his lodgyng), went to the great chyrche to masse, whiche the Cardinall of Augusta sang, and thEmperour very plesant at the masse tyme, whiche was noted, for that yt was beyonde his accustomed maner.

The first daye of this monythe thEmperour and the Kinge of Romayns did visite the Duchesse of Bavare at her lodgyng, who is here with the Duke. The Quene of Romans is loked for here dayly with all their famylie. He toke my commyng to Hym very thankefully, and said that He rejoised very moche in this amytie, and trusted that God wolde encrease yt dayly, and for his parte, He wolde not fayle to do that He myght for the good contynuaunce of the same; and so departed.

Duke Maurice of Saxe hathe written a boke of the takynge of the Duke of Brunswicke, for his excuse; whiche I wolde sende you, together with a pistle that Buceres hathe written to them at Trent, wherein he declarithe causes, whye he and the resydue of the Protestantes will not comme to theyr

Ferther he said he was desierus to speke with me for dissolution of tharmyes; wherunto I told him I had yet receyved no commission from Your

Your Highnes¹, and albeit I wold have regarde to kepe that was concluded, yet I could not dissolve tharmye, untill I had receyved from Your Majestie speciall commission therfore. Hereat the Admyrall was somewhat astonyed, and graunted I had reason for to saye. Howbeit he said I might retiere your armye from the hill, and bryng theym to the rest of your armye here. Wherunto I said that this conclusion was soden, and that I was determyned within two dayes to repayre to the hill my silf with tholl armye, and therefore had given ordre 14 dayes paste that no victuelles shulde come hither, but all to goo thither for the furnytüre of the same. And also I said I wold be lothe to bryng thAlmaynes into the towne of Bulloyne, by reason wherof I muste of necessite kepe theym there for a season, where also I must leave somme to see the perfyting of suche fortification as is begonne. Hereat thAdmyrall said, there might no newe fortification be commenced. Wherunto I said that this fortification was commaunded by Your Highnes to be commenced a moneth past, and I had in dede begonne yt a good meny dayes paste. "Well," quod thAdmyrall, "yf ye fortifie there, we must fortifie at "Sainte Estiens." I told him he might do therin as he thought good. "But howe shall we do then," quod he, "for our armyes?" I desired him to considre that having here in Your Highnes armye suche a nombre of strangers of dyvers nations, and a great nombre of our owne, that must passe the sees, whiche requyreth a tyme to have shipping prepared for theym, and also a nombre of Almaynes, who, as they came thoroughe thEmperours countrey by ordre and direction, must also passe by knowlege and licence of the Lady Regent, and so retorne in like sorte, as also thItalions presently here woll passe thoroughe that countrey; the Frenche King must therfor take in good parte, thoughte they be not so sone dismyssed and retyred, as they may do thers, who may at libertie retorne uppon their frontiers. Wherunto the Admyrall said, he must then likewise give ordre for the contynewyng of their armye; and yet he was carefull, what inconvenyence might happen betwene theym. Wherin we thus agreid, with Mons^r du Bies there present, that our men shuld not passe the water without my speciall saveconduit, ne any of their armye without the saufeconduit of Mons^r du Bies; and also that as this daye at ten of the clock proclamation shuld be made, in all places, of this conclusion of peace betwene Your Majeste and the Frenche King.

He then spake unto me touching the delyverye of prisoners, whiche was (he said) wont to be delyverd uppon peace taken, and therefore requyred me they might be delyvered. Wherunto I answered, that in this conclusion of peace there was no article concernyng the same, and that yt were pittie, that pore gentelmen and others, that had honestly adventred for thatteynyng of theym, shuld be empeched therin to make their best advauntage; and so in fyne desired me to be good unto Mons^r Estree, which I promysed I wolde.

ThAdmyrall divided also with me of the sending of one to cristen the Dolphyns childe in Your Majesties name, and wolde gladly knowe, who the same shuld be, to thentent he might give ordre for his enterteignment, saying he promysed M^r Secretarie to cause one to be sent from the Frenche Kinge, whose letters he said he had to Your Highnes, and a gentelman redy to depart with theym, and prayd therfore that he might depart with theym out of this haven; which I graunted unto him. And, asfor the matier of cristenyng, he asked, whether I had harde nothing that I was appoynted therunto. I answered, "no." Wherunto he said, "I mervayle therat." And then sayd I, I had hard that, yf he had gone into Englande, my Lord Admyrall was appoynted to goo into Fraunce, and being there, I thinke he shuld have done it; but that being nowe altred by reason of his retorne, I knowe not what shalbe done therin. ThAdmyrall said he intendithe to repayre to Your Highnes within one moneth, and must nowe retorne unto his master to signifie the state of his affaires, and in the meane tyme desired me, yf I camme my silf, or hard of any other shuld come, that I wold advertise him whither he came in poste or otherwise, to thintent he might gyve ordre for his enterteignment accordingly. And so we departed; he going to their forte, and I to Bulloyne.

According herunto I attende dayly to here from Your Majeste your pleasure for dissolution of this armye¹, wherin I have commened with my Lorde of Wynchester and the Master of the Horse, who departe hens tomorrowe, yf the weyther woll serve; and wyll make reaporte to Your Majeste accordingly. In the meane tyme I accompt yt my duetie to recommend to Your Majestes goodnes the service of the straungiers, whom yt were expedyent, in my pore opynyon, so to dismysse and with suche liberalitie, as they may be glad and encouraged to serve agayne, whose reaporte and good contentment shalbe not only moche to Your Majestes renowne and fame, but also terrour of suche as wolde any thing thinke to Your Highnes displeasure. And as I shalbe instructed to do particulerly in any of thies thinges, so shall I use my silf according to my most bounden duetie. Asknoweth Almightye God, Who ever preserve Your Majeste in your roiall

MCCCLXXXVIII. THIRLBY to PAGET.¹

AFTER my most harty commendations. Havyng receyved apou the 13th day of this monyth, letters from you and others of the Kinges Majesties Commissioners, of the longe desyred, and to me right joyfull, peax; acordinge to my commission I declared the same the day after to thEmperour, for that day the Princes and others of the States of thEmpyre, of the Catholiques, were after dinner with thEmperour, to declare their conclusion for the remission of all matters of religion to the Counsell at Trente, like as I advertised you by my letters of the 9th of this monyth; and herwith I sende you the very letters wherby I had that advertisement, but his name cut owte², les, contrary to my promise, he sholde be known if the letters were taken. The worlde begynnith to be daungerous, all is here setto warre; 2 or 3 dayes past divers capitaynes dispatched to make souldiours. We say here that Mons^r du Bures hathe a great bandde, bothe of horsemen and fotemen, to marche forward when he shalbe commaunded. And hither cam 7 or 8 dayes past Mons^r du Lyre, Generall of the Moustres, to take the moustres, whiche of divers shalbe taken within this 3 or 4 dayes, abought 12 leages hens towards the Ryne. The bruyte of this warre is for the restitution of the Duke of Brunswike, and not for the cause of religion, but for thadministration of justice (whiche apperteynith to thEmperour) and repressinge of rebels; and to perswade this, thEmperour hathe within theys 2 dayes written letters to divers Princes and Cyties of the Protestantes, signifyinge this to be his entente, whiche thinge thAmbassadour of Savoye tolde me upon Whitsonday after dynner; of whome also I lerned, askinge hym howe yt fortuneth that the resydue of the Commissioners of the Princes were at that tyme with thEmperour, and he away, (for he is Commissary for the Duke of Savoye as oon of thEmpire) he said, the matter was to declare to the Emperour their conclusion of the remittinge of all matters of religion to the Counsell at Trent, for the maynyng wherof he was in the Counsell House with the reste ; but he needed not to go with them to thEmperour, Who knewe bothe hym and his master weall enough. Here I said to hym that in my judgement this was a playne settinge uppe ageyne of all olde abuses and errours, that hadde ben hertofore withowte hope of eny amendement, for who will loke for other at that Counsyll, wher the Bisshoppe of Rome rulyth as chefe, and hathe his 3 Presidentes there, by whose autorite all thinges procedith. " The remission of all matters of religion " to Trent " (said he) " is tempered, so that thEmperour do provyde that " every man may have fre accesse and recesse to the Counsyll, and have in " the same their free voyces." " Yet " (said I) " yt plesith me not, so longe " as the Bishoppe of Rome shall their rule, where He hathe as moche to answer " for his partie, as He can lay to others charges:" and thus passed this communication, gentilly and frendly, resonyng to and fro. It hathe bene tolde me that the Duke Mauryce of Saxe, who is present at this Diete, hathe bene moved to take armes for thEmperours partye, who sholde answer that as he wolde not move ageynst thEmperour, so he requyred that he myght remayne in peax and not medle ageynst thoders. Yt hathe bene tolde me ageyne, that thEmperour hathe never moved this Duke Mauryce to take armes with Hym, no nor yet wilhave eny Coronell of suche as be of the Protestantes, albeit (as they say) divers hathe bene here, and offerid theyr servyce to thEmperour. Whiche of theis tales I sholde beleave, in good faithe I cannot tell.

Syns my commynge hither I have written to you six severall tymes, viz. 19^o and 28^o Aprilis, 6^o Maij, and 4^o, 6^o, and 9^o Junij¹, and sent my letters by thordinary post to M^r Carne, so to be conveyed to you ; by my whiche letters I advertised you of suche occurrantes as I coulde here lerne, and sent you certeyne actis of the Councell at Trident, whiche nowe I have not to send ageyne. I hadde skant leysour to copie them oons to sende you, I coulde have them no lenger. I sent you also with my last letters the copie of the proposition made by thEmperour to the Statys at this Diete, and that ye shall receyve ageyne with theis. Forsomoch as yt was thought that the first article of the said proposition, concernynge the waye howe to order the matters of contention in religion, wolde make moche busynes betwixt the Catholiques (as they call them) and the Protestantes, with moche adoo yt was ordred that the Catholiques by them sylfe, (who hathe answerid for matters of religion as ye se before) and the Protestantes by them sylfe sholde make answer to every article of the proposition. The Protestantes, as I am advertised, will answer that they be contentid to submitte all matters of religion to a Generall Counsell tō be kepte in Germany, where the matters may be ordred by the Counsell, and not by the authorite of the Bisshoppe of Rome, nor of non other. I pray you let me knowe from you, whither ye have receyved my letters or no, that I may hereafter lerne howe to 'aste the ordynarie postes with my letters of common occurrantes. I fere (if this warre go forthe, as I se non other likelehod as yet) that the passages shalbe so stopped, that ye shall skant here from us; and therfore I make the more haste for the dispeache of this post, withowte kepinge hym for tarryinge for eny further knowledge, les that kepinge hym to longe he myght peradventure comme never a deall. I will do what I can to lerne howe the Frenche Ambassadour shall advertise to his master, and by that wayes advertise the Kinges Majesties Ambassadour there, so that by hym you may have knowledge. Heringe that the Frenche Ambassadour had no advertisement of this peax (whiche makith me to thinke that the man ys not greatly estemyd at home), I caused Seignour Barnardyne to advertise hym therof; who toke yt thankfully, and rejoysed very moche therat, with offer of servyce and plesure that he coulde do for me.

We loke dayly for the Duke of Cleaves to be heare, and thinke that he is worthy blame to make his wife to tary heare, and to loke so longe for hym, who camme hither with her mother the Quene of Hungarie, (and also woon other of her systers to be the Duke William of Bavars sons wife) apou Friday laste, beinge met withowte this towne by thEmperour, the Kinge of Romainys her husbonde, and others the Princes and Nobles that be here, havynge with the vauntecourours and the rearebande above two thousande horse, I meane thEmperours trayne and all: howbeit if I over recon, ye shall pay never the more. Thus lothe to make an ende of my longe bablinge with you, I bid you hartely fare weall, and pray God longe to contynue the Kinges Majestie in peax and honour. From Ratisbona, the 15 of June, 1546.

I had almost forgotten to telle my gladnes of your tydings of the Cardinall of Scotlande¹; yt ys halfe a wonder here that ye dare be so bolde to kill a Cardinall.

PLEASYTH yt your moste honorable Lordships. Accordinge to the purpourt of your letters of the 13th of thys, receyved by me the 16th of the same very late, the moro after I spake with the Presydent Schore, and such as wer with hym of the Counsaile here, accordinge to my charge comprised in the seyde letter, for the passage of such souldiours as shulde returne from the Kinges Majesties servyce homewardes to theyr dwellinge places throw thEmperors countreys. Of whom I hadd anser, that the Quene wolde arryve hether that night without fayle from Bynkes; to Whome the Presydent sayde hee wolde declare my suyte, and thereapon make me anser, not dowtinge but that She wolde see suche order takyn therin, that they shulde passe quyetlye, yf they wolde use themselves honestlic, payinge for all thinges they shulde take. Thys daye abowt the howre of a 11 before noone, I receyved yours of the 15th of thys¹, touchinge the same matier, commandinge me to use diligence therin: and ther accordinge I have donne. Thys evenynge the Quene sent me an anser by the Presydent, which ys, that at the Kinges Majesties contemplation they shall passe in theyr returnynge, as quyetlye and as favorably as they wer suffred to passe thetherwardes, soo that they use themselves honestly, payinge for that they take. And for the sure and quyet passage of them She dothe wryte to Mons^r de Ruys, to see that they be not stayede nor molested in theyr passage, so that lyekwise, as they wer suffred to come thether without lett or disturbance, soo, for the Kinges Majesties sake, shall they be suffred to returne, so that they do not hurte theyr subjectes in theyr sayd passage.

Moreover, of the Quenes behalf, the Presydent requyred me to wryte to your Lordshipes, that forasmoeche as the Scotcs wer declared enmyse by thEmperor, at the Kinges Majesties requeste, and eversyns hath byn takyn by thEmperor as enmyse, and that Hee haeth no nother cause to contynue hys enmytie ageynst them but for that they were the Kinges Majesties enmyse, therfor She wolde gladly knowe, whether the Scotcs be comprehended in the peax lately concluded there with Fraunce or not. much as, if any such thing shoulde be ment, the Paltzgraves parte were very likelye to be therin, I thought good to take an occasion to speake with him, to knowe somewhat of the certeintye of thies thinges; and for my shadowe, I toke the reaporthe of Mr Kerns servaunt, who having ben with my Lorde of Westmestre, retourned this waye, and shewed me first that the peax was concluded. This I thought shold be a good errande for me; and therewithall I went to Heydelberge, and arryving there in the evenynge, I sent worde to the Paltzgrave that I wolde gladlye speake with him, and was appointed at 9 of the clocke in the mornynge; at which tyme I tolde him that I hadd assured worde of the peax, albeit I hadd thereof no letters from the Kinges Highnes, which I doughted not nevertheles but I sholde shortely have; but, forasmuch as I was sure that he wolde be gladd of the newes, I thought it my parte to bring him so much worde thereof, as I hadd hard of by sure reporte. He thanked me right hartelye, and sayd, that he did much rejoyce at the tidynge, wherin if he might have hadd an occasion, he wolde have ben gladd to have ben a mean longe sithen. "And now," quod he, "be you, thanked be God, in peax, and the warr is holye tourned upon us." "Marry," quod I, "in dede suche a bruite I here, but I can hardelye be persuaded that He, Who hath so often declared him self, both by speache and writing, to desyre no thing more then peax and the weale and quyet of Christendom, wolde now, all thinges being compownded and at a good poynte in the rest of the worlde, begynn a sturr, and that against Him self. For I reckon Germanye to be a parte of Him self, and any thing that He sholde move against that nation, to attempt it as it were against his owne entraylles." "By my trouthe," quod he, "the fire is putt in to the strawe, and hath allredye raysed a smoke, and undoughted the flame woll followe." "Against whome in particular, Sir," quod I, "is this moving?" "Against the Protestantes," quod he, "against whome elles?" "Hath He so professed?" quod I. "Not even in playn wordes," quod he, "but the Counsellours of the Duke of Saxony, the Lantzgrave, the Marques of Brandenburge, and myn, have ben with Him, and have shewed unto Him the commun fame throughe Allmayn upon this levying of men, and have desyred Him to signifye unto them, to thintent they might advertyse their maisters thereof, whither He purpose to employe that armye against Germanye." "He answered," quod he, "He was not so unnaturall, that He ment any damage to his natyf countreye, which He ought rather to defende then to ruyn; but if He did attempt any thing, it sholde be against such as, contrarye to their duties

“ and naturall alleageaunce, were growen to suche an inobedyence, as behoved
 “ not for the good of the countreye to be endured; wherin if they wolde shew “ them selves to contynue, and wolde not consent to suche reasonable poyntes “ as sholde be devysed for the peax of Germany, He coulde no lesse do, in “ dischardge of thoffice that Godd hadd commytted unto Him, but do his “ best to make them knowe their dutyes; and this was all they coulde gett
 “ of Him.” “ I trust you, Sir,” quod I, “ be owt of daunger in this mattier, “ for any trouble ment against you or your domynyons?” “ I can not tell,” quod he, “ how He woll expownde disobedyence; what if He comprehend “ religion therin? as for any other matter, I have not much doon any thing, “ wherbye I maye be noted disobedyent. For as for myne absence from “ the Dyet, He hath accepted myn excuse; and surelye it is not fayned.
 “ I wolde be lothe at this age to be troubled with warr,” quod he, “ and “ surelye I woll sytt still as longe as I may be suffred; and so much the better
 “ may I so do, for that, albeit I have receyved the religion, I am not yet “ entred in to any confederation. I woll do what I can to meane the thing:
 “ if there be no remedye, then must Godd worcke.” And herwith semying to be somewhat verry of standing, he tolde me he wolde for a while retyre him self, and wolde mete me again at dynner. I wolde fayn have excused my self, and tolde him that I was a man of dyett, and not very well at ease.
 “ We are very well coupled,” quod he, “ sycke to sycke, you shall eate and “ drynke as you list, and so will I too.” And thus he went his waye, and left to entreteigne me the Chauncelour and the Secretarye, who imedyatlye without any entrye to the mattier, began to lament, with many wordes, the state of Germanye, “ and all ” (quod they) “ for the Bisshopp of Rome, and “ by his provocation.” “ ThEmperour doth not so pretende,” quod I, “ but “ allegeth that He lacketh suche obedyence as apperteyneth; but, how so ever
 “ the mattier be, if frendeshipp largelye offred might have ben embraced, “ thinges er this tyme might have ben in such a trade, as I am sure in

 “ that Him self standes in, what so ever be the ende therof, I warraunt you
 “ He may dormire in utramque aurem. We never have warr, but we fetcche
 “ it, and seke it abroad. If we provoke no man, we be never sought uppon ; “ suche a good wall hath Godd and nature made even rownde about the “ realme. And besyde the one great advauntage, we have that you lacke,” quod I, “ we drawe all after one lyne.” Here we stode a space, on loking uppon an other, and sodenlye, “ Utinam,” quod Hubert, “ Dominus noster tam cito “ non prodidisset se.” The Chauncelour loked upon him with a cowntenaunce somewhat altered. “ Quam prodicionem narras ?” quod I. He made none answer, but nodded 3 or 4 tymes with his hedde, and therewith were we called to dynner ; where dyned the Paltzgrave, Duke Philipp, I, the Chauncelour, Mr Mownt, and the Secretary. The Paltzgrave forced him self to be merrye, and ever he talked of the coursying in Egham Meede ; but me thought all was force, and suddenlye he wolde fall in a dumpe, and forgetting him self, blesse him, and saye, “ Sic transit gloria mundi.” The dynner being allmoste at an ende, tidynges was brought, that Naves was coome to him in poste from thEmperour, which caused him to haste the taking upp of the table, and me to take a shorte leave, and so to go my waye.

Thes men ar surelye much appalled with the suddennes of this geare, and yet is not thEmperour in such a redynes, but they may well provyde before his commynge, if He do coome. He hath sent for 8000 Spanyardes owt of Naples, Sicilye, and Italye, and Vienna, who can not so soon be here. He mustereth here in 4 places ; one of the places is nighe to Reynsburghe, 2 places in Bavire, and oone in Episcopatu Eichstetensi. I thinke He woll make some decrees and ordynaunces in the absence of the Protestantes from the Dyett, and declare them first contumaces. To thes decrees if they shall not condescende, then shall they be taken for inobedyent, and so shall the quarell begyn. He is undoughtedlye concitatissimo animo in illos, aswell for the absenting of them selves from this Dyett, as the sudden departing of their lerned men from the same, and for their dysobeying of such processes as passe ex Camera. This Naves is coom to devyde the Paltzgrave from them, and to advise him at the least to sitt still, who is in such a perplexitye uppon the same, as I thinke it woll rydd him owt of the worlde, so fayn wolde he be quyett, and can not so be saving his trouthe and honestye.

Duke Philipp hath ben in hande with me to knowe what he may do with the Kinges capitayns. I tolde him my fansye that for so long tyme as he

he hadd hyred them, he might kepe them from the service of any other. If he wolde employe them by any mean against thEmperour, he must not then lett them have, in any cace, the name of the Kinges servauntes, but utterlye dischardge them. We shall shortelye knowe the quarell that thEmperour woll have against thes men, and it is possible if He have the upper hande of them, the Pope shalbe one; but if they hadd not this obstinatlye refused to coome to Him upon his often calling, I thinke assuredlye He wolde not so sone ben moved against them in respect onelye of Him; and so thinke allso a great manye sobre men of their owne sorte. And thus, having none other occurrentes worthy advertysment after my desyre, to pardon me if I trouble you with long letters of small importaunce, I committ you to the tuition of Allmightye God. MCCCXCI. CHEYNE to PAGET.

GENTLE M^r Secretary. Sence my last letters dated at Parys the 28th of the last moneth¹, the next day, as I wrote in the same, the Provost and Echevyns and diverse other of the said towne came to my lodging, and welcomed me with a gentle oration expressing the great joye it was unto them of the renewing of thold amitie and great frendship betwene the King their maister and the Kinges Majestie, over long to reherse, and presented me with a great quantitie of ypocras, and diverse kindes of wines, with comfitures, marmalades, and torches. And there I was constrained, althoughe I had not ben evill at ease, to tary for thamending of the Kinges Majesties cheif present, which was the salt, which was broken in diverse thinges and could not be finished before Wednesday last, so as Allard was feyne to bring the coover of the same after me to Melin, and all the rest was mended before my coming from Parys, and Mons^r de Moretta entreteined and fested me there, and so along upon the water the furst night to a towne called Corbeylle, and from thence the said Wednesday to Melin, where Mons^r de Canaples was redy to receyve me at the water side, with a Maistre Dotell of the Frenche Kinges house, and diverse other of his officers, who made me a supper and a brekfast, more meter for a Prince than for so poore a man as I am; and so the said Mons^r de Canaples and Mons^r de Moreta accompaned me into the forrest to thassemble, where the Frenche Kinges dyner was prepared; where I was before his coming, twoo houres; and then He came thither accompaned with the Dolphin, the Dolphinesse, and 20 or 30 great ladyes and gentlewomen, and diverse of them excellent faire; and there, at his lighting, I made the Kinges Majesties most hertie commendations unto Him, and of His Hieghnes prosperouse helth, which His Majestie desired mucche to perceyve, and knowe that He were in the semblable, and so He welcomed me after as kinde a sorte, as thoughe I had ben a great Prince, and mucche rejoysed to heare of the Kinges Majesties helth and prosperitie, with many good and kinde woordes, over long to reherse for me at this tyme; and so had me to dyne at his owne boorde, and set me directly against the Dolphin, and entreteyned me after the best sort that could be possible, and gave me 5 or 6 kinde of dishes from his own mease.

And as to thAdmyralles coming thither, He told me apart, as I am sure you be advertised or this by the Frenche Kinges Ambassadour¹, as I suppose now being there, he requireth a longer day for his goyeng into England for certein busynes betwene thEmperour and the Protestantes, which the Frenche King wold fayne heare something of before the departure of the said Admirall. And as to the ratification, which the said Admirall told me the usage and custom was, was that both shuld be done upon one day, which he said that shuld be no matier for the staie or lett of our Admiralles coming hither for the ratification of the King his maisters part, and that the King his maister nor he mistrusted not, but that the Kinges Majestie wilbe at all tymes as redy for his part to accomplishe the same accordingly. The said Admirall remayneth firm to kepe his jorney alonges the sees to London in his gallies, where as I wold wishe he shuld be no woorse receyved nor entreteyned, then I have ben sence my furst coming into this contre unto this present houre, being but a poore man as I am in comparison with him.

I have no more to trouble you with at this tyme, but that the christening shall not be unto Sonday next, and that the nomination of the childe is referred to the Kinges Majestie, which I have said His Higghnes pleasour is shall then beare his moothers name, which was Elisabeth, Who was as good and as vertuouse a woman as ever lyved in this worlde. And to expresse the statelynes of this house, and the commodities that belongeth to the same, with that I have seene sence this short tyme of my coming hither, it wold require a better pen man then I am, and also a longer tyme. As knoweth our Lorde, Who send you aswell to fare as I wolde myne nowne selfe. From Founteine le Bleaue, this seconde of July, at 9th of the clock in the morning.

Your owne for ever assured,

Post scripta. M^r Secretary, by that I have hard, and also by that I perceyve, here is great preparation in hand for rynnning at the tylt, and diverse other kindes of triumphe and highe chyre; and, as it was told me, here is alredy above thre hundreth ladyes and gentlewomen, and a great company of noble men and gentlemen; and I think, and God Himself with all his Apostles were here, they could not have beene welcomed after a more better and more hartie sort, nor better entreteyned, then I and all the gentlemen in my company have beene sence my furst comyng where the assemblie was, both with the Frenche King Himself, the Dolphin, and all the rest of the company. And, sence the coming of this bearer unto me, he can declare a part of the maner of all the people. Thus I am bold to trouble you with a long letter, and to litle purpose, but I must desyer you to take the same in good part, and to think that I meane well.

Hast, Hast,

Post, hast, for thy lief,
for they lief.

MCCCXCII. CHEYNE to PAGET.

GENTLE M^r Secretary. I had not thought to have troobled you with any mo of my rude letters, but that this day Mons^r de Bowshtet came to my lodging, and asked, whether I wold any thing into England, sayeng he dispeched thither to there Ambassadour. Whereupon I thought I could do no les but to advertis yow of suche thinges, as I have sene and herd sence my letters sent yow by Nicholas the currere. The chefe matier is, that myne entreteynment and good chyre doth increase every houre more than other, not oncly with the King, Who I assure yow was nothing so lusty nor so gaunte, when I saw Him last, as He is now, that insomuche I wold not have beleved He had byne in so good case as He is, if I had not sene Him myself; but also the Dolphin, the Dolphinesse, my Lady Margaret the Kinges doughter, the Princesse of Navarre, and all the rest of the company, both men and women. It is not possible, as it semeth unto me, that any man can be more gladder then the Frenche King and the Dolphin ar of the Kinges Majesties love and frendshippe, whiche He saith He never brake in his hert, nor never will; and the Dolphin is every day apparailled in white and grene. The Quene is something acrased, as they say; wherefor I have not sene Her as yet, albeit She shalbe one of the Godmoothers.

Yesterday, assone as I had dyned, Mons^r de Morette had me to the Frenche King, accompaned with many other gentlemen, as He made an end of his dyner to the wasshing of his handes, where was a great nombre of noble men and gentlemen. And, assone as He had washed his handes, the table was taken away, and He rose, and his chayre was a litle remooved to the wall, where He sat downe againe, and called me unto Him, and wold not suffre me to speake one woorde, onles my cappe were on my hed. And there, incontinent, after a few woordes, He rose, and had me and the 6 gentlemen, the Kinges Majesties servauntes, whiche ar here with me, and but a very few others, into his Privey Chambre, whiche was as cold and as freshe as could be devised, considering the tyme of the yere; whiche is a gloriouse chambre, and so is thother without, where He dyned. And, after we had bene there awhyle, He had me into a fayr gallory of 300 foote in length, and 19 or 20 foote brode, very gallant and costly, and after suche sort as it were over long to reherse. And so is all this house to me a thing incredible, onles I had sene it myself, as I am sure asmany as be here with me will affirme the same.

And

And so frome thence underneath the said gallory diverse fayre chambres, a fayre bayne, and a fayre hote house, with diverse other commodities, more then is in my hed to expresse, onles I had a longer tyme. And so caused me to suppe with Him, where sat next above Him the Dolphynesse; next unto her, his doughter; and at the upper end of the boorde, the Duchesse of Saint Powle; and next beneth Him, Madame de Tampes; the Dolphin next her, and so diverse other great ladyes, 2 boordes being set squyrewise, and the Cardynall of Loreign, the Cardynall of Farrare, the Duke of Guyse, thAdmirall, and diverse other, and I directly against Madame de Tampes, and on my right hand, against the King and the Dolphynesse, twoo other ladyes, whose names I knowe not.

The Christening is appointed to be to morowe¹ aboute 5 of the clock in thafter noone, as one Mons^r de Nawnsee, who hath bene or this in England, I suppose the Kinges Majestie remembreth him very well, a goodly gentleman, Captein of one of the Frenche Kinges Gardes, of his Privey Chambre, and Maister of the Ceremonies; who dyned with me this day at my lodging, and the Secretary Bowshtet also, who wrote the childes name in my patent, being "Elizabeth." The said Mons^r de Nawnsee told me the Quene and the Pryncesse of Navarre shuld be Godmothers to the childe, and how that I shuld sit at supper hard by the King on his left hand, and served with coovered dishes and coovered cuppes, as and the Kinges Majestie were here Himself, but that He shuld sit above the Frenche King on his right hande. When I hard him say so, I sayd myne authoritie continued no lenger, but onely during the tyme of the Christening. Whereunto he made aunswere and said, that shuld be no matier, for the King his maister wold nedes have it so.

And as I wrote in my former letters of rynneng at the tylt, on Monday there shalbe great justes and turney, whiche the Dolphyn will nedes have me t[here]. M^r Secretary, there can be no more done than i[s to] me, and I were a Kinges soon, and all for the loove and affection they beare unto the Kinges Majestie. The thing is suche, that the like was never sene nor herd of, as I think; and Mons^r de Moretta continually with me, and the most diligent and the metest man to entreteyn straungiers, that ever I saw, or, as I think, ever shall see, and he telleth me he cometh into England with thAdmirall.

Thus

Thus I bid yow aswell to fare, as I wold myne nowne hert. From Founteign le Bleaw, the thirde day of July.¹

Your owne assured for ever,

This letter shuld have byne caryed by the Frenche post, if this bearer had not come as he did, forasmuche as it was redy to the closing before his arrivail.

MCCCXCHII. WOTTON to BROWNE.²

S^R. As yow willidde me to do yesterdaye, I folowidde the Frenche Ambassadour, and fownde hym at his howse. And having declaridde unto hym that that yow shewidde me, he answeridde that thAdmyrall didde prepare hym selfe to come hither as soone as he mighte, and to be heere withyn the tyme apoyntidde for the ratificacion. And therefor, emonge other preparatifz made for that pourpose, he sayde that thAdmyrall hadde sent worde to the Baron de la Garde that the galeis shulde be yn a redynesse for hym. Yet, forbicause that the King his maister dothe chieflye repose his confidence for the handeling of his weightye affaires yn the sayde Admyrall, yn whose absence neverthesse the Cardynal Tournon usith to supplye his roome, for as muche as the sayde Cardynall is syke, and not unlyke so to contynue a whyle, yf it shulde so chaunce it mighte peradventure be occasyon that the sayde Admyrall shulde summewhat the later departe from the Kinge his maister. And therefor, all be it yn deede that thAmbassadour trustithe that thAdmyrall will be heere withyn the tyme of the ratification, yet yn cace it shulde chaunce for the cawse abovesayde that thAdmyrall wer not heere so soone, then the Kinge his maister desyridde the Kinges Highnesse not to be discontentidde with it. And how be it that he saithe that yn deede he shewidde the Kinges

¹ Cheyne wrote another letter on the same day to Paget, and with reference to the christening says, "even nowe the Kyng, the Dolfyn, the Admyrall and a great compenye of ladies came under my chamber wyndowe in thre lytell gallyons, synggyng as swetlye as ever I harde, the Kyng Hymselfe being one of them that sang. Suche a tryumph at a christenyng, as I thincke was never sene nor harde of, as this is lycke to be."

² Holograph.

Highnesse

Highnesse that, the tyme of the combat approching so neere, thAdmyrall peraventure wolde assiste hym, to whome the Frenche Kinge hadde grawn-tidde the campe¹; yet he meanidde not that that shulde be enye cawse why thAdmyrall shulde staye enye whyle. But he broughte yn that but incydentlye, and (as it seemidde) he meanidde that he spake that as of hym selfe; for dyvers tymes duringe our communicacion he desyridde me not to forgette to declare that the Kinge his maister didde not grownde the stayeng of his Admyrall upon that cawse, but upon the other of the Cardynalles sykenesse. For as for the combat, he confessidde that it was not a thinge of that importance, for the whiche thAdmyrall oughte to be stayed enye whyle; and desyred that it mighte please the Kinges Highnesse so to understande and interpretate his wordes: and that, al be it that undoubtidlye thAdmyrall preparid to come hither shortelye, yet, seing the Kinges Majestye fownde it goode that he shulde come as soone as mighte be, he wolde not fayle to advertyse his maister of it with speede. He sayde neverthesse that he declaridde to the Kinges Highnesse that, all though the sayde Admyrall came not hither so soone as he was lookidde for, yet, yf it pleasidde the Kinges Highnesse to sende, the meane season, my Lorde Admyrall to his maister, to requyre Hym to ratifye the treatye, his maister wolde be redye to do it, when so ever He wer requyridde of it. Wherunto I sayde that, whyle we wer at Guisnes treatinge of this peace, we wer ferst borne yn hande, that thAdmyrall of France (yn cace the peace tooke effecte) wolde not retourne to his maister, but come streight hither. And afterwarde it was tolde us that he wolde retourne (for consideracions) to his maister; and, the christeninge beinge done, he wolde come streight hither, and that it was then meanidde that my Lorde Admyral shulde so departe hence, as he might be with the Frenche Kinge, when theyr Admyrall shuld be heere with the Kinges Highnesse; so that then it was thoughte that the Frenche Admyral shulde sette forward streighte after the christeninge. And, seing it was sayde that they shulde be aboute one tyme, eche of theym, with the others maister, I thought it wer not meete that my Lorde Admyrall shulde go firste to the Frenche Kinge, and theyr Admyral come hither, or peraventure not come hither afterwarde. ThAmbassadour¹ sayde that he knew of none other agreement but this, that theyr Admyrall shulde be heere withyn the tyme of the ratificacion, and so he might be yet righte well, and so was it meanidde he shulde be, unlesse the Cardynalles sykenesse didde staye hym for a sennight or fortynight. But, neverthesse, knowing the Kinges Highnesse pleasur heeryn, he sayde he wolde wryte to his maister of it.

As for the combat, the which he sayde he brought yn but incedentlye, he saith that what diligence so ever he make to wryte to his maister of it, yet he thinketh that it will be labour loste; for the daye apoynted is the 8th of this moneth. He sayde also that it was but a pryvate mater betwixte theym to, and that yn suche cases, when the thinge yn controversye betwixte menne of warre can not be other wyse tryedde by the lawe, that then suche combatz wer used to be grauntidde, and the King his maister having taken deliberacion upon the graunte of it, at the last had ottroyed it. And therfor he thoughte He cowde not well lette it now, and that these menne bothe wer but straungers to us and to theym, and therefor it was not a thinge to be regardidde nor caridde for. Wherunto I sayde that, yf he didde his diligence to wryte of it, all though peradventure his letters shuld not come tyme yn nough to staye the mater, yet he shulde theryn use the parte of a goode minister, and more cowde not be requyridde of hym; and that I, for my parte, cowde not take it to be a verye pryvate mater, for, seing that one of these 2 had done suche a fawte against the Kinge my maister, and that that was the thinge that now was leyd to his charge, and wherupon this combat is growndidde, I cowde not perceyve but that it towchidde sumwhat the Kinge my maister. And that all be it combatz ar grawntidde, when maters can not otherwyse be tryedde, yet these menne wer not yn that cace, for thoffence of the one not onelye can wel be tryedde, but is so notoriouse to the world, that it needith no other tryall at all; so that yn reason and equyte I thoughte, for my parte, that the Kinge his maister shuld do as well to punisshe hym for it, as to ottroye hym the combat. And, all though He had grawnted it hym all redye, yet that was done duringe thostilitye betwixte Hym and the Kinges Highnesse; but now, yn this greate amitye and fraternite, it wer meete thinges wer otherwyse consyderidde. And though they wer bothe straungers, yet the tone was notoriouslye fawtye, and the other not, and therefor oughte not to be bothe lyke estymidde. And, how be it that thAmbassadour stode awhyle yn the defence of this mater, sayeng that he thoughte that his maister mighte not honorablye now denye that thinge, that He had delyberately grawntidde; yet he sayde he wolde not fayle to gyve his maister advertisement of it with all speede possyble, and use the parte of a goode minstre yn it. This is theeffect of thanswer that I had of hym. Written at London, the 5th of July, 1546.

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime. Ea tumultuatio et commotio, que nuper hic in Germania coorta est, ex Imperatoris verbis, quibus significavit Se velle aliquos in Imperio inobedientes castigare, perdurat et invalescit; in confesso enim est Imperatorem magnas copias conscribere, et summa vi bellum moliri. Verum Protestantes, et maxime ij qui in federe Smalcaldico sunt, putant non unum aut alterum inobedientem peti, sed totam eorum religionem Cesarem abolere et exterminare, capitibus et potentioribus, sine jure, sine injuria, sublatis, cupere; et hujus infesti in religionem suam Cesarei animi evidentissima et clarissima argumenta non pauca se habere adferunt. Cæsar enim eandem religionem in ijs locis, ubi facultatem et jurisdictionem habet, ferro et face persequitur, eamque edictis gravissimis proscribit. Romano vero Episcopo, hanc doctrinam execranti, et thesauros ecclesie in eam delendam profundenti, Cesar subservit et gratificatur, non tam conscientia motus et religione (ut plurimi ominantur) quam dominandi ambitione, et libertatis Germanicæ tollendæ studio: et qua prudentia est religionis nomine dissimulato inobedientiam quorundam prætexere dicitur, quos suis conatibus et cupiditatibus inprimis obsistere videt et expertus est. Verum hæc Ejus artes a rudibus tandem Germanis quoque depræhenduntur, qui quoque pro tenuitate sua vires et arma parant. Principes enim et Civitates omnes, qui in federe sunt, aut pecuniam aut militem mittunt ad religionis sue defensionem, et, ut audio, duos exercitus educere parant; et ad reprimendos adversarios, et ad ea loca occupanda et in fidem accipienda, ex quibus facile damna accipere possent, Civitates Augusta, Ulma, et reliquæ in Superiori Germania sitæ, conjunctas copias in campum eduxerunt, quibus Wirtenbergensis quoque Dux se conjunget; qui, præter domesticum militem, aliquot Helvetiorum milia conducta habent. Elector Saxonie ipse copias suas educturus dicitur contra Episcopos in Norico et Franconia habitantes, ut Bambergensem, Herbipolensem, Passoviensem; is quoque prioribus se copijs conjuncturus dicitur, nam in ea loca precipuam Cesaris vim convertendam arbitrantur. Lantgravius expeditis copijs Rhenum occupaturus dicitur, operam quoque daturus nequid detrimenti Protestantes ex Brabanticis regionibus, ubi ingens apparatus fieri dicitur, accipiant; tum ne Cesariani Colonia potiantur, plurimum enim momenti in ea urbe situm est, ut que claustrum et ostium totius Inferioris Germanie et Rheni sit. Saxo et Lantgravius intra dies paucos copias suas educturi sunt, magnum enim momentum in celeritate positum arbitrantur; nam quam ingens Cesaris potentia, et quam late diffusa sit, notissimum est, tum multa peditum et equitum milia ex Italia adventare dicuntur, partim a Romano Episcopo in auxilium Cesari missa, partim ab ipso Imperatore conducta. Rumor enim constans est Gonzagam, Ducem Camerini, Columnnam Fabritium, Principes Tarentinum, Salmonium, et alios magni nominis capitaneos, magnis copijs advenire. Certis authoribus fertur Episcopos et Clerum Hispanie magnam pecunie summam Cesari in Lutheranae (ut vocant) doctrine exterminationem promississe: Cardinales quoque una cum Romano Episcopo pollicitos esse, se negotium Gallo facturos (si opus sit), ut etiam si velit nullum Germanis auxilium prestare possit. De numero copiarum Cesaris nihil certi hic audio, sed ingens militum numerus conscribi dicitur in Austria, Stiria, Bohemia, et reliquis Cesaris ditionibus. Bavarie Dux, Marchio Albertus, et Episcopi quidam omnem suam vim ad Cesarem conferunt. Exigit quoque Cesar a Catholicis subsidiariam pecuniam, quam illi statim subditis imperaturi dicuntur. Palatinus Elector modo cum Nobilibus suis deliberat, quid sibi faciendum sit, et plerique suspicantur neutri parti eum opem laturum. De Nurnbergensium quoque fide dubitatur, et, ut fertur, dicunt Cesarem non parare bellum ad religionem tollendam, ac securitatem sibi pollicentur. Dux Mauritius in magno apparatu est, et is domi intra Saxoniam consistet, eam ab omni impressione defensurus; timor enim est, ne vicini Bohemi illac bellum inferant. Dux Wirtenbergensis Magistrum Ordinis Teutonicorum cepisset, nisi famuli ejus acri pretio commisso fuga elabendi tempus Hero morte sua redemissent. Lantgravius equites et pedites ad Dominum de Buren et Martinum a Rosshem proficiscentes ex Westvalia, insecutus est, et in oppidulum quoddam Hameln dictum, compulit ubi modo eos obsidet. Commissarij aliquot ex Protestantibus modo Smalcaldie agunt, et opinio quorundam est, omnes Protestantes hic Francfordie Conventum habituros propediem. Quem finem hec tragedia acceptura sit, incertum est. Protestantes etsi Cesari potentia inferiores sint, tamen caussa se longe superiores esse non dubitant, adeoque satis constantes et erectos animos habent, vel rectam religionem et libertatem, per Dei gratiam, armis defendere vel honesta morte pro aris et focis fortiter occumbere. Ego Regie Vestre Majestati debita fide et observantia me supplicem commendo et addico. Datum Francfordie, 15 Julij, anno 1546.¹

MCCCXCVI. KNYVET to KING HENRY VIII.¹

PLEASE it Your Magestye tunderstande, that usyng all the dyllygence I myght possiblye, to comme hyther at the daye of the combate², whiche was yesterdaye

² The first mention of this combat, which excited so great an interest, is found in a despatch from Hertford to Henry VIII. of the 21st of June, which contains the following passage :

“As touching my cousen Knyvet, notwithstanding his presence here were not a litell to purpose at the dysmyssing of thies straungiers, which were under his charge, and be not yet fully discharged; yet, for that he is appoynted by Your Majestes letters tattend upon my Lorde Admyrall in this journey into Fraunce, to thend he might the better prepare him silf and his trayne for that purpose, I have lycensed him to repayre over at this tyme, whiche nevertheles he was desierous to have done after the dissolving of the straungiers, aswell to have knowen Your Majestes pleasure, whether he shuld take upon him to be padryne or not untill Julyan Romero, one of your Highnes Captens Spanyardes, in the combate or campe that he is appoynted to be betwene the said Julyan and Mora; who fledde like a traytour from Your Majestes service; and being for the same desafied by Julyan, doth maynteyn his acte and him silf to be honest, and to fight in that quarrell with the said Julyan: as also, Your Majeste being so contented, to have prepared him silf, as honestly as his power wold serve him, to accompenye the same Julyan, as his padryne, to the place of the said campe, which is appoynted to be fought the 8th of the next moneth before the Frenche Kinge at Fonteynleblewe; in the whiche combate, I am enformed, the said Frenche King and the Dolphin doth not a litell supporte and set furthe Mora with money horse and harnes, and all faveor that may be, as my cousen Knyvet can more at large declare unto Your Majeste, unto whom I shall humblie beseche Your Majeste to give credite in the same.”

Romero on the 23d of June obtained an order from the Council for restitution of 21*l.* 5*s.* which had been stayed by the Searcher of Dover, upon respect the same was sent over for his furniture in the King's service. This is the only entry in the Council Book (Museum, additional MSS. No. 5476.) of that date respecting Romero, though from the following letter from Sir Thomas Cheyne it appears that a further order was on the same day given respecting him:

“Pleaseth your good Lordeshippes. Your letters dated at Grenewiche the 23th of the last moneth I receyved at Britoyle, of this bearer Nicholas, the 25th of the same; for aunswere whereunto I must desyer your Lordeshippes to beare with me, althoughe I must nedes say and think you have trubled and combred me horriblye with the contentes of your said letters, touching the campe betwene Anthony De Mora and Julyan Romero, which I have, according to theeffect of the postcripta in your said letter, used the same with doulce woordes to the Frenche King, whereby I thought I might be the bolder to use my discretion in the same. I thought it best furst to moove thAdmirall to have his advise, and not to reherse any woordes of treason, which me thought semed very unfitteng, and specially now being so receyved and entreteyned of the King, and also of all the company, after suche sort as I think the like hath not bene sene nor herd of before. The said Admiralles aunswere is, that, forasmuche as the said Julyan Romero hath the King his Majesties patent of the campe, that the Frenche King may not denie the same, oncles the request of the prorogation proceded of the said Julian, and that I wold yesterdaye the 15 of this monethe, I fownde neverthelesse so greate scarcety of horses on the waye, that the lyke hathe nat bene sene, the same beyng all taken and occupyed with soche as repared from all partes of this realme to se this campe fowghten. Natwithstandyng, with soche shyfte as I coulde make, I, with my Lorde Harbarte and M^r Legh only in company, arryvyd the vearly daye of combate here at 10 of clocke in the mornyng. And fyndyng the combattauntes but a while before entred the feelde, and reposyng them selfe in ther tentes, untill the Kyng had dyned, and wer comme in to the place wher as He wolde se the fyght; I repared to Jullyan his tente; and understandyng ther by Mosieur de Morett, that the Admyrall, beyng apoynted to be master and judge of the campe, was within the lyste or campe, and that I

“ undertake for him accordingly, and that he shuld be contented to respit the matier not onely “ for 3 or 4 dayes after my Lorde Admiralles coming hither, but also for a longer tyme, if they “ wold here so require it: whereunto myne aunswere was that he shuld not denye nor refuse “ any thing that I had mooved, according to the contentes of the same your Lordeshippes said “ letters. And of this, which it semeth your Lordeshippes to make a great matier of, they make “ very litle or nothing, and if it were an hundreth campes, being straungiers to both Prynces as “ they be.”

A further letter from Cheyne of the 8th shows however that he had procured a postponement of the combat for seven days, and a notarial instrument for that purpose was drawn up and transmitted by him.

In the same Council Book is an entry of the 31st of July, showing that 27*l.* 10*s.* were given to Romero, “ towards his furniture against the combat with Mora, who fled from the King’s service.” And Knyvet was furnished with the two following letters from Henry to the King of France and to the Dauphin :

“ Mons^r mon bon Frere. Ayant entendue cest matyn par lettres de Mons^r de Cheyne, que le “ jour du combat entre Julyano Romero et Antonio Moro ne se peult prolonger plus longuement “ que jusques au Jeudy prochayn, Nous avons volu depecher devers vous en post pour ceste “ affayre le Sieur Knevet, Gentlehomme de ma Chambre Privey, par lequel Nous vouldryons “ volentierement Vous avoiyr escript toute ceste lettre de nostre main propre, selon ce qui “ demande et nostre amyte et la qualite de ce present porter, neust este que le jour est si court, “ et pourtant demande si grand hast de la part dudict Sieur Knevet, que je suis contraintes “ Vous rescripre en ceste sort, et nonobstant Vous prier tresafectueusement avoir pour recommande “ le dict Sieur Knevet, et le croire en ce quen cest affayre vous dire de la part de

“ Vostre bon Frere Cousin

“ perpetuel Allie,

“ Mons^r mon bon Cousin, filleul et compere. Pource que le Sieur de Knevet, Jentilhomme de “ ma Chambre Privee, parte dicy en poste devant mon Cousin le Viscounte Lisle, Grant Admyral “ dEngleterre, pour se trouver a ce combat de Julien Romero et More: Je lay vouleu vous “ recommander tresafectueusement, vous priant de luy croire, en ce quil vous dira de ma parte, “ comme feries a moy mesmez. Ainsi apres mez trescordialles recomendations Je prie a Dieu “ vous avoir en Sa saincte garde. De Westmistre, le 11^{me} de Juillet 1546.”

And in the following September an annuity of 150*l.* was granted to Sir Julyan Romero, Knight, for his life, from Midsummer preceding. (Warrants by stamp, No. 50.)

¹ This letter, though dated on the 17th, was probably commenced on the 16th.

myght speake with hym commodiously, I went to hym, and presentyd to hym Your Magestyes letters and commendatyons: whiche he accepted veary humbly and joyefully, as it semyd unto me; and dysmountyng from his horse, he walkyd up and downe with me, untill he had sent woorde to the Kyng, that I was comme. Wherupon I was sent for to the Kyngs Majestie, and by Mons^r lAdmyrall hym selfe was brought unto his presens; wher, after I had delyveryd Your Highnes letres, and made your most harty commendacyons, I requyred His Majeste to take in good parte as well my commyng so late, as also so owte of order of thyngs mete for the matter I cam for, and for soche a presens as his was; alledgyng that where Your Majeste was in expectatyon that the campe sholde be prorogyd untill my Lorde Admyralles commyng hyther, and therfor, albeyt I was padryno to Jullyan, yet beyng apoynted in commysseyon with my Lorde in this jorneye, it was thought that in that cace I myght have executed bothe offyces at ons, and tarry to accompany my sayd Lorde Admyrall. And, for as moche as the knoledge of this last determynacyon cam so late to Your Highnes, that ther was no remedy, but eyther I must have lefte Julyan without a padryno, or els to comme in poste as I dyd, His Majeste answeyrd, that my commyng was as well as myght be, and that no man coulde comme from Your Majeste to Hym at any tyme, who shall nat be as welcom unto Hym as hym selfe coulde desyer. And as for the apoyntement of the daye, He sayd He had done as moche as He myght bothe to have had no combatte at all, as also to have had it proroged accordyng as Your Majeste dyd requyer; but as for the furst poynt, He sayd, onles Julyan dyd hymselfe requyer the campe off Hym to be taken up and agreede, He coulde nat do it, havyng graunted it by his patent sealed with his seale. And as for the other poynte, He saythe it was ons agreed to be delayde; and, after, Julyan commyng hyther, and presentyng hym selfe in the courte, dyd so fyer Mora, that, withoute He sholde have ben noted partyal, He coulde nat prolong it any longer daye, beyng importunatly callyd upon by Mora, sayng that he had wronge to have any daye changed otherwise than was in the patent apoynted; so that for Your Majestes sake He saythe He apoynted this daye, and more He coulde nat do, gyvyng greate prayse to Julyan, and as it semyd havyng but smalle opynyon of Mora his valyantenes to be comparyd to his.

These woordes past, He opened Your Majesties letres, and after He had redde them, retornyd to me agayn, and asked me of Your Majestes welfare, sayng that He dyd as moche desyer the contynuans therof as of his own; with many other wordes of affectyon, expressing what joye was inprynted in his hart by reason of this peaxe betwene Your Majestie and Hym, whiche He sayd myght perhapps be to somme, whiche love neyther of You bothe, no vearly great pleasure, but to Hym nothyng more acceptable nor joyfull; trust; that it was no lesse unto Your Highnes than to Hym; with many other lyke wordes, whiche I can nat reherse, as they wer expressyd. Wherunto I made soche answer as my wytt wolde sarve me, declaryng unto Hym that ther was no lesse good affectyon in Your Majeste towardes His Highnes, nor lesse desyer to here agayne of his good prosperyte, than of Your Majestes own; whiche I sayd was at my departyng, thankyd be God, right good. And as towchyng the peaxe, I sayd that God lovyd Chrystendom to well to suffer soche a plage, as the warre betwene Your Majeste and Hym sholde be to the same, to contynew any longar: and as the only worker of this peaxe was Almyghty God, so I trustyd He wolde mayntayne the same styll in the hartes of bothe Your Majestes. Wherat, laying his hande upon my sholder, He sayd ther was never thyng that grevyd Hym more than this warre with Your Majeste, but that He thought ever though ther wer warre, yet ther was in neyther of You bothe rancor nor harty malyce, and that a love of reconcyled frendes was without comparyson and fellowe, so that this lytle scruple, that hathe ben for a ceason betwene Your Majestes, chaunced to make a gretter love betwen You bothe, the whiche He sayd was his mynde and desyer to have contynew for ever. Wherunto I replyed with as good wordes off frendship and love, as I thought sarvyd for the porpose, sayng that the breache therof was never lyke to procede from Your Majeste. And so, for as moche as it was tyme the combattantes wer in the feelde, I requyred lycens of His Majeste to retorne agayn to Julyan. And, for as moche as the Dolphyn was ther present, I dyd present Your Majestes letres and commendacyous to hym, whiche he receyvyd very jently; and, for that I had lernyd syns my commyng hyther, that ther was no soche offer made by hym to be padryno to Julyan, as it was tolde me that he dyd make, I dyd nat rendre Your Majesties thanks to hym in that byhalfe, but declaryng unto hym the cawse of my commyng, and besechyng hym of his lawfull favor towardes Julyan my combatante, I toke my leave of hym lykewyse, and so retornyd to Julyan; who I ensuer Your Majestie was nat a lytle desyrouse to shew what he was, and how wylling to defende any quarell that sholde towche Your Majeste, his mayster and Prynce, moche more in so playne a trewith as this was; and with those wordes requyred me to make all possyble hast that he wer with his enymye at handes: so that from the begynnyng to the ende he orderyd hym selfe so manfully, and with so good a corage, that that he withdrew from the other, in a maner, the hartes off all that wer ther; and had at the ende so honorable vycctory over Mora, as the more honorable hathe nat ben sene. The hole processe wherof and the cyrcumstances, for that yt wer to tedyouse to wryght them to Your Majeste, nat being so bolde to commytt them therfor to this letre, I shall beseche Your Majeste most humbly to remytt the declaratyon therof unto Your Majeste by Master Hobby, who maye be so enformyd of all by this berar Medelyn¹, that he shall do Your Highnes more lyvely to understande it than I can do by wryghtyng, wher yn I do nat dowbte Your Majeste woll take great pleasure; for it was so handled of Julyan here, that he wan to hym selfe no lytle honour, and, to be playne with Your Majeste, in my opynyon no smalle glory and fame to Your Majestie; attributyng alwayes his supportatyon and favour in this matter to Your Majeste, in soche sorte that he was callyd the Inglyshe combattante, and nat taken for a Spanyarde. Wherfor, seyng the affectyon of the man so great towards Your Highnes as I do, I shall beseche Your Majeste most humbly to accepte in good parte, that I do commende hym to your most bountefull goodnes, whiche, in my symple opynyon, what so ever it be, shalbe well employde.

The Kyng, after Julyan had the over hande of his enymy, makyng hym to be browght before Hym, gave unto hym openly his diew prayse, and afterwarde presentyd hym with a chayne worthe 600 crownes and with 400 crownes in mony: the Dolphyn, in lyke maner, with a fayre gowne of sylver tyssew, and a doblet and hose of white velvet, sett all over with bottoms of gowldde veary ryche. Of the Ladyes afterwarde at nyght in the Quenys chamber he was so interteynynd and honored, as was wonderouse to se. And as Julyan repared to the Kyng ther to gyve his thankes for His Majestes present and rewarde, the Kyng interteynynd hym a great while with shewyng hym of his well handlyng of hym selfe, and how gladde He was that Your Majeste his brother had soche a sarvaunte, sayng that, beyng Your Highnes sarvaunte, he sholde lacke no pleasure that He coulde do hym: I ensuer Your Majeste with veary earnest wordes, and openly; as I am sure he woll declare unto Your Highnes at his aryvyng ther. And, as for Mora, Julyan thinkyng his boddy to be to vyle a present to be browghte to Your Majeste, he dyd ymedyatly make a present of hym to a yong lady in this Courte, namyd Madame de Traves, syster unto the Vidasme of Chartres, who, ever syns Jullyan and his company came hyther, shewyd unto hym soche favour as to lende mony, provyde them vyctayles, and shewyng so earnest favour to them, that I ensuer Your Majeste I thynke it my duty to advertyse Your Highnes therof. He is a gentleman of a great howse, and well estemyd here; and, syns my commyng hyther, hathe made me large offers of horse apparrell and all that he hadde, to sarve me with, untill my own wer comme.

And, to tell Your Majeste of my interteynement here by the Kyng, it maye please the same to understande, that, as sone as the combate was don, I was browght by Mons^r de Moretto unto a chambre within the Courte, wher M^r Thresorer¹ was also lodgyd, havyng ever syns 3 messe of mete furnyshed in my lodgyng, and sarvyd with the Kynges own offycers, and so accompaned with gentlemen, that it is harde to se the lyke; and alwayes Mons^r de Morett so dyllygent, that at all tymes he thynkythe I maye go wher the Kyng is, he dothe nat forgett to bryng me thether; wher at my commyng I do ever fynde soche rejoycyng of this peaxe, that His Majeste hathe had no other communycatyon with me at no tyme, and is moche desyrouse to here that my Lorde, Your Majestes Admyrall, wer on his jornaye hytherwarde; as yester nyght, at the takyng of Julyan and Gamboa ther leave of Hym in the Quenys chambre, He asked me agayne, whyther I had any newys of his commyng, and when I answeyrd that I knew no other but that he was on his waye, He sayd alowde, “A foy de gentilhome, il sara fort bien venu, quant “que il vient.” And to certyfye Your Majeste what tyme the Admyrall here dothe sett forwarde, I can not tell; for as farre as I perceyve, it shalbe as he herythe newys of my Lorde our Admyrals beyng on this syde the sea, thynkyng that by reason he takythe his jornaye by se, that if he departe hens as sone as he shall here that my Lorde is comme over, he shalbe with Your Majestic as sone or soner than my Lorde can be here at this howse; where, the Admyrall tolde me, the Kyng intendyd to receyve hym.

And, to advertyse Your Majeste of the occurrantes here, I ensuer You here be non worthe the wrytyng, that I can here of, savyng that I perceyvyd yesterdaye by the Ryngrove, that where he was apoynted to attende upon the Admyrall to Your Majeste, he doth now repare in to Almayne; and the most parte thynke his goyng is to practyse with the Protestantes. For, tellyng me that he went thether, to se what he wolde saye, I tolde hym that, the warres beyng fynished, he dyd well to vysyt his contrey: and he answeyrd, rather he went to breake some of the Spanyardes heddes, that wer comme thyther, sayng we wolde have a new Emperour, and make a Daulphyn of Fraunce Emperour. So that I can not judge what his mynde is to do ther, but these wer his wordes, whiche I commytt to the judgement of Your Majesties most grave wysedom. And most humbly besechyng the same to take in good parte this my rude wrytyng, havynge no other Secretary than my selfe, I beseche Almyghty God long to prosper Your Majeste in honor and helthe. From Fontaynebleau, the 17 of July.

Your Ma^{tes} most humble and obedyent

THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

AFTER moost hartie recommendacions. Whereas I, the Admyrall, have recevid from you a copie of the othe to be mynesteryd to the French King, and for as moch as the same shuld seame to take some wordes specyfyed in the clause of the treatye, wych also we have recevid from you, and that yt semeth to bynd the French King to that wych perchaunce He will refuse; to thentent, in such case, we wold most gladly knowe howe we shuld proceade, we do herewith retorne unto you the said copie of the said othe, keping with us a doble of the same, as also we do send unto you an other instrument with some additions therunto; requiring you to let us be advertised of the Kinges Majesties pleasure, wych of the said instrumentes we shall followe, with all possible dilligence.

And thus, having none other newes to wryt unto you at this tyme, but that this day we aryved here in this towen, where we have found very gentle interteynment, as we have done both at Monstrell and Habeville, with large presentes of wyne, and all kindes of wild foule, with many goodly wordes spoken by the Mayores and Councell of the townes, and specially here; whereof we pray you to advertise the Kinges Majestic. From Amyens, the 20th of Julij, at 9 in the night, 1546.

¹ A commission passed on the 7th appointing Lisle, Tunstall, and Wotton Ambassadors Extraordinary to receive the King of France's ratification of the treaty. Tunstall on the 10th wrote to Lisle from Boulogne, stating that he and Wotton had been there for three days, and pressing Lisle to

MCCCXCIX. KNYVET to PAGET.¹

Syr. After my most harty commendatyons. Wheras this berar Signor Pedro de Gamboa dothe presently repare to the Kynges Majeste, for as moche as the great affectyon and desyer whiche the sayd Gamboa hathe to sarve the Kyngs Majestie hath bene so well expressyd in his workes, as I have sene it with myn ies, and that I have bene on of the meanys to bryng hym to His Majesties sarvyce, I can do no lesse, now the tyme is comme off his rewarde, than to commende hym to your goodnes; prayng you to be no lesse favorable to hym than I wolde wyshe you sholde be to my selfe; for if ever estraunger deservyd rewarde at a Prynces hande, in my opynyon Gamboa hathe deserved yt of the Kynges Majestie. His charges and paynes have ben soche to shew hym selfe a faythefull sarvaunte to the Kyngs Majeste, as I thynke the more can nat be of a man of his degree; as M^r Fullwood can well certyfyte you, with whom it maye please yow, at my request, whan you be at leysour, to common in the same. Wherfor it is nat a litle towching the to join them as soon as possible. On the 12th the Bishop, still at Boulogne, informed Paget that he had yet received no intelligence of the Lord Admiral, and that it would be impossible to exchange the ratifications by the 17th, the day appointed. On the same day Lisle wrote to Paget from St. Johns, in consequence of Tunstall's letter of the 10th, suggesting, whether they "shall make any capitulation for saving the passing of the daye, on which by the treatye the ratification should have been confirmed." On the 17th a minute of an agreement for prolonging the time for taking the oath was drawn up, and corrected by Paget. But it does not appear to have reached Amiens on the 20th, for no allusion to it is made in a separate letter of this date from Lisle to Paget, in which he mentions the arrival of a messenger from the Admiral of France, and proceeds:

"His credence was, to shew me that the Frenche Kyng had advertisementes that a great bande of men, armes and fotemen, of Burgonyons and lausknightes, were coming to the fronters of Fraunce, and that the Admyrall wold gladly tarry to see some thinge more of the matter before his departing towards the Kinges Majestie, yf he thought he mought so doo without offending His Majestie. Wherfor he desyered to have myne advise; and looke, as I wold advise hym, so wold he doo, tho yt were to putt his fote in the styropp immediatly upon the retourne of the sayde gentillman, towards his journey to Diep. Wheruppon I shewyd hym that I had recevid the nyght be fore letters from the Kynges Majestie, signyfying that theyr Ambassadour had byn at the Court, and had delivered theyr ratefycaction, with allso a requeste for the prorogation of the othe and for the Admyralles coming tyll a lenger day; which I dyd suppos His Majestie had grantyd unto theym; wherof I thought, with the reste of theyr Ambassadors procedinges, theyr Admyrall sholde be shortly advertysed frome him. Albe yt I shewyd him the Kynges Majestie, I dyd thynk, dyd think long for the Admyralls comeng. With this he retourned agayne frome me with all dilligence."

Kyngs

Kyngs honour to se his interteynement be accordyng; for, if you dyd se what wages and lyvyng some have here, whiche be nat worthy to beare his male after hym, you wolde thinke it nat unmete the interteynement, he shall have, wer soche as is fyttyng for so noble a Prynce, as the Kyngs Majeste is, to bestowe apon his very good sarvaunte. Besydes his well sarvyng, the honesty of the man is soche, as I never fownde the more in no man duryng my lyfe. But, Syr, if I do enlarge to moche in the commendatyon of hym to you, I praye you thynke that I do yt more to dyscharge my duty, whiche honesty byndethe me unto, knowyng, as I do thairfor, that I mystrust you can nat, or wyll nat, consyder the same as well without my wryghtyng, as with the same. Nevertheles, under your correctyon, and requeryng you to pardon me therfore, I woll shew you some parte of my fantasy concernyng his interteynement. I thynke that lesse than 2000 crownes yerly can not be gyven to hym, eyther in pencyon or in lande, and of the same I wolde wysshe 400 crownes wer in fee symple¹, to sell or to gage, whan so ever he sholde be commaunded to sarve His Majestic, and for to releve his present want of mony, wheryn I knowe he is to have some present of 2 or 3000 crownes in mony or 2000 in money and one in plate; to have his patent of Maister of the camp [in tyme] of warre, with all allowances as he had in these warres now endyd, so that the nombre of Spanyardes that shalbe under hym be no more than they wer at this tyme, nor no fewer than 1000. And this I thynke shall habundantly satisfye hym, and accomplyshe with the Kynges Majesties honour, whiche I esteme more than all the mony in the worlde, for mony is but monye, and honour is the chefe perle in a Prynces crowne. Syr, I am to bolde in this matter, but knowyng your goodnes, I have put awaye feare, and shall praye you to take in good parte the same; assuryng you that albeyt I am a pore man and almost of the porest in the Kyngs Majestes sarvyce, yet I desyer so moche the Kyngs Highnes sholde shew his wonted lyberalyte to this man, that I had rather begge, than he sholde nat be accomplyde with to the uttermost; and nat dowtyng but of your goodnes you woll consyder the same, I woll troble you no more theryn at this tyme, but commyt hym to your good remembrans, wheryn the more expedytyon be used, the more gratefull shall the thyng be that shalbe gyven, what so ever yt be.

For the others in his company, if Julyan have 4 or 500 crownes yerly, it

¹ On the 26th of July Lisle informed Paget that Julian Romano was then also on his way to England.

² In the State Paper Office is a minute of the instructions to Sir Thomas Moyle, Sir Edward Wotton, Sir Edward Bray, Sir John Harrington, and others, as Commissioners for the survey of Boulogne and the Boulonnois, to portion out lands, grant leases as well to Picards as to English, mark out parishes, &c. &c.

MCCCCI. LISLE to PAGET.

AFTER my moast hartie recommendacions. Theis shalbe tadvertise you, that yesturnight I receaved your letters of the date of 22th, and this daye, of the 23th of this present, with also one letter of the Kinges Majesties owne hand, and an other of His Highnes to the Frenche King his good brother. And nowe beyng furneished with our letters, I entend, God willing, to departe towardes Fountayn de Blewe tomorrow, where thAdmirall¹ doth tary my comming, and before woll not, for any thing that I can do by prickinge him forwardes, [procede] on his journey. What thocation ys, I cannot knowe, but uppon Saturday last the French King sent la Baron de la Garde unto me in post, who met with me at Beaumont withe a letter from the Frenche King², and an other from thAdmirall; the copie of which letters you shall receive herewith. His credite was, to shewe me of suche intelligence as the Frenche King receaved out of Germany, to the like effect that I have receaved from you, wherwithe he seyed He had depeched a post towardes the Kinges Majestie his good brother, declaring further that thAdmyrall wold set forwarde on his journey uppon Thourrissday or Friday nexte, and wooll be at Rouen within too dayes after, where he imbarkeith, and thyncketh within three dayes after that to be at London. The greatist personages that commith in his compenye (asfarre as I can learne) ys Mons^r de Tayes, Mons^r de Brisack, Canaples, and one other of thOrder. In commission there ys noone with hym (as I can learne) but hym self.

Yesturday we arrived here at Parrys, and by the waye at Saynt Denys Mons^r de Morret met with me, who made a bancket ready at the Abbey there; and oone leage without Parrys Mons^r de Lavall (who ys oon of the greatist inhereters in all Fraunce) met with us, accompayned with 60 gentlemen, and after hym met with us the Provost of the Marchautes of the towne of Parris, accompayned with a greate number of Burgesses on horseback, offering unto us all the pleasour that the towne could do for us, and so accompayned us to my lodging, whereas they prepared a greate supper and a bancket, and this day a dynner; all at the towne cost. And this night the Cardynall de Medon, (whom at the writyng herof I had not seane) preparith a greate bancket for us in the Lovers, where there shalbe a greate number of Ladyes.

This night Mons^r Moret hath promesed me I shall knowe the certenty of all thAdmiralles trayne, and what horses or moyles he carithe with hym, with the certen daye that he wooll be at Rouen, and whethur he entrith into the ryver of Thaymes, or wooll land at Dover. Assoone as I shall receave this knowledge of Morret, I wooll gyve you advertismentes. I wooll not forgeate to shewe thAdmirall thorder taken by the Kinges Majestie for his more suer conducting into the Thames, beyng a place so daungerous, except he have good pilottes. As I can perceave yet by Morret, I thynck yt wooll be a day or too, ere we shall depart hence, for the King ys not yet comme agayne to Fountayn de Blewe, where He ys mynded (as I can learne) to make us greate chere, and the house ys putting in order for that effect. By our next commune letters the Kinges Majesty shall be advertised of our first accesse. And thus for this tyme I take my leave of you. At Parrys, in hast, the 26th of July, 1546.

I have declared unto M^r Knyvet his slacknes, who excuseth hym self by the postes, which I perceave have not used them selves as they ought to have doone, as I have sithens declared to Mons^r Moret and others; for the which they are like to be ponisshed according to ther merites.

MASTER Secretarye. After I had depeched my letters unto you of yesturday, beyng the 26th of this present, here arrived with me the Baron de Lagard from thAdmirall, of whom I have learned the certeyn daye of the setting furth of thAdmirall, which wooll be Monday next, as he assurith me. And theis names, which I send you herewith¹, be the greatist personages that he bringeth with hym. He myndeth to be at Roan uppon Wennisday comme sevensnight, and imbarke the next daye after his commyng thethur, and so myndeth to come alongest the sees into the Thaymes without any tarieng. I shewed the saied Baron (who hath the chardge of all the gallyes) of thorder the Kinges Majestye hath gyvon for his receaving in the Downes, and of the pilottes which shalbe brought uppon bourd them there; wherof he ys veray glad. The nomber of ther gallyes shalbe 12 or 14. Horses they bring not oon with them, except certayn mules, to gyve awaye. He makith his reakonynge that thAdmirall shall be at London within three dayes after his imbarkeyng at Rouen.

Other I have not to write unto you, but of the greate chere the Cardinall of Medon dyd make unto us this last night, wherin there lacked no good meate nor drinck, nor good companye of ladyes and gentlewomen; but ther playes and other pastyme, as they had provided to shewe us, dyd not take effect, as they wold by like have had yt: the nomber of the people was so greate, and the place so letill, that there was no order. The Cardynall excused it by the devosion the people had to see thEnglisshmen, which came with so joyfull newes unto them. We are advised by Morret to stay here this day longer (who doth moast gentilly and paynfully attend us that ys possible). And to morowe we shall meete with the King (as I am enfourmed), where He hath provided to shewe us pastyme of hountynge, and so to Fountayn le Bleau. As knoweth the lyving God, Who send you aswell to fare, as your gentle hart can desyer. From the cytye of Parrys, the 27th of July, 1546.

(Signed) Yo^r owne moste assured,
JOHN LISLE.

MCCCCIII. LISLE and WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASITH yt Your moast excellent Majestye to be advertised that uppon Tuesday last, beyng the 27th of this present, we departed from Parrys towardes the French King, beyng accompayned with Morret and others. And at Vile Neff Saynt George (beyng the mydwaye betwene that and Corbell) the Cardynall of Medon dyd abyde our commyng, where he had prepared a collation for us; and there Mr Knyvet fell soore syck, where he was fayne to remayne, and that night one of the Kinges owne phesitions was sent unto hym. And from thence the saied Cardynall brought us to Corbell, where we laye that night, and there one of the French Kinges Master Dotelles had prepared our supper, being served with his officers, and with his plate and vessell. In this place my Lord of Duresme was constrayned to tary behynd us, having hurt his legge with a fall of his horse.

The next mornyng, beyng accompayned with the saied Cardynall and Morret, we were brought to a place in the forrest of Corbell, where the King made an assemblye for his hountyng, beyng receaved, a myle before we came thethur, by Mons^r de Lavale, and thAdmiralles son, and Brisack, and so conveyed to a villaige where the King was, Who had dyned before our commyng, and our dynner was prepared for us in a [tent]. And after dynner thAdmirall (accompayned with dyvers n[oble] men) camme for us, and brought us to the King, who was [in an] arber made with bowys. And after our salutacion [made], He toke me, thAdmirall, by thand, and ledde me to a wyndowe, where He dyd gyve me audience. And after I had made Your Majesties moast hartie commendacions and delyveryd Your Highnes letters. He drewe Hym aparte, and red your letters, and came towardes me agayne with a cherefull countenaunce, demaundyng veray hartilly howe Your Majestye

Majestye dyd: to Whom I declared the prousperous estate of Your Highnes, with allso the cause of our commyng. And, after I had made an yernest intercession unto Hym to pardon myne want of language (who had not been moche used to speke in the French tong), He sayed (to encourage me) that I spake well, and that He understood me well, and in case I dyd not understand Hym well, He byd me not spare to aske Hym agayne, and so He wold doe unto me. I dyd set furth Your Majesties good affection unto Hym, with the desyer You had for the contynuaunce of the amitie betwene You, and that for your part nothyng shuld be omitted, that either the treatye or friendship dyd requier, and that Your Majestye trustyd to fynd the semblable on his behaulf. Wherunto He seyed, that He had no doubt in his good brother, and for his part he mynded assuredly to perfourme all thynges, and that he trusted the amytic betwene You (although hit had been greate) shuld be nowe greater and more assured then ever yt was. "And uppon "Sonday nexte" (seyed He) "you shall receave myne othe: and my "Admirall departith hence uppon Monday next towards my good brother; "whom I maye" (seyed He) "evill spare at this tyme. Neverthelesse I "wooll not breake promesse with my good brother." Wheruppon He brake of, and seyed I shuld goe with Hym to se a hart killed of force; and I desyeryd Hym merillye, to spare either Mr Wotton or me, for yesturday we were foure in commission, and nowe we were but 2 left, hable to serve Hym, and if we shuld breake our legges or armes with runnyng the harte of force, we had no moo of our fellowes left to wayte uppon Hym. Wherat He laughed veray hartilly, and seyed I shuld goe with Hym, and that He was contented to spare Mr Wotton, whom He dyd veray gently imbrase, seyeng He was glad that his good brother had chosen so honest a man to resyde with Hym, as He had hard hym repourted to be. And I shewed Hym that I trusted He shuld fynd hym the man that He wold wisse to have; for if Your Majestye had not had a greate opinion in his honestye, Ye wold not have placed hym in this place. And after He caused me to kisse the ladyes there, which allso dyd ryde a hountyng with Hym, uppon greate curtalles, He lept uppon his moyle, and went towards his pastyme, and killed a hart with force of houndes, exceedingly well: Hym self dyd not followe, but kept the crosse wayes. The Dolphyn spared not, thyck nor thynne. And while the hart was a killyng, the King lighted at a fountayne, where He had his wyne and fruyte.

In the meane tyme thAdmirall entertayned me, walking up and downe in a field togethurs, fallyng into devises of the Newe Fort at Boulloign Broke, which which Your Majestye doth nowe fortifye, seyeng that yt was contrary to the treatye; the disputyng wherof hyld us untill the King had doon his drincking, and was departed. And we (kepyng styll our matter) finally fell into the matter of payment, and he dyd wysshe that Your Majestie wold graunte a shorter daye of payment, wherin he desyryd me to be franck with hym, as he wold be with me in all thinges; seyeng that nowe uppon his depeche towardes Your Highnes, he went fully instructed with his masters full mynde, and that he knewe throughly his intencion. "And I am suer" (quod he) "you do the like of your master, and if ye wooll commune with us in this matter before your departure, we may take some resolution before my commyng to the King your master. And, if ye wooll not commune with us in yt, shewe me your mynd, whethur ye thynck I may breake it to the Kyng your master at my beyng with Hym, or not." Wherunto I aunswered; as touchyng that matter, yt was sufficiently ynough debated betwene us at our last beyng togethurs, and what impechement ther request in that behaulf was like then to have been to the conclusion of the treatye, I repourted me unto hym self. Wherfore I shewed hym that Your Majestye (myndyng on your behaulf the perfourmaunce of the saied treatye in every poynt therof) thyncketh nothyng lesse, but that your good brother entendeth fermely the same on his part; and that I had no commission to alter any part of the saied treatye, neither to commune of the same. And, forasmuche as he dyd desyer me to be franck with hym, I seyed I wold not wisse that he shuld move Your Majestye in that behaulf. "Well" (seyd he) "then yt shall not be spoken of." Thus we left, falling into communication of his departure, sayeng he wolde make the moast speede he could to be at Rouen, which he dyd rekon wold cost hym fyve dayes from hence to Rouen; and then in three dayes after he made his reakonyng to be in the ryver of Thames. And he toke occation to aske me, when I dyd thynck to departe, and whethur I wolde goo to Callayes or Boulloign by lande, orrelles in the gallyes with hym, or in the sakre which was taken by the gallyes, the which the King his masters pleasour was shuld be delyveryd agayne. I shewed hym, that I had three or foure of Your Majesties vesselles abydyng my retourne at Callayes, and for sundry other affayres I must retourne that way agayne, thankyng hym veray moche for his kynd offer, neither seyeng that I wold receave the saied sacre, nor that I wold refuse her, because I knewe not Your Majesties pleasour, and that yt shuld seame they loke for as good or better restytucion.

Thus I brake of with hym, and followed the King to the death of the harte, harte, and so to Mellune to his bed, which was but twoo leages from the place where He hountyd. He made me ryde with Hym through the towne, devisyng and commending the pleasours of the countrie about Fountayn le Bloye. Yt was thought He dyd use me this, because He wold have all thAmbassadours (who were lodged there, aswell thEmperours, as the Bisshop of Romes, and others) to se the amytye which He bearith to Your Highnes. That nyght I dyd supp with Hym, and was brought into thAdmiralles lodgyng to make me readye. This daye He removith to Fountayn le Bleau, and by the waye He hountith the wyld boore in toyles, and had appoynted me to se yt; but I could not attend yt, for this depeche, for I had rather forbear such pastymes then neglect my ductye to Your Highnes. As knoweth the lyving God, Whom I beseche allwayes preserve Your Majestye in prousperous felicitie, with continuall desyer of your moast princely hart. At Melune, the 30th of July, 1546.

unponyshede here, more then Your Majestie wolde, in case any such were spokyn by thEmperor within Your Majesties Realmes or Dominions. Off thies compleyntes She doeth moche mervell, seynge nothinge therof was moveyde here to Hyr, nother to any of the Counsayle; for, yf hyt hadde, upon information therof She wolde a seen such ponyshment done, as all other might have takyn example to beware of the lyeke. Truth hyt ys, hee sayde, that of late a lewde fellowe of Andwarp, oone that hadd commytted a murdre there before, violentlye dyd sett upon an Englishman in the seyde towne of Andwarp, and dyd hurt hym grevously, which was takyn, and, by commandement of the Counsayle here, was put to dethe within two dayes aftre; and of any other She harde not. And yf She maye have information, what they bee, that haeth spokyn any wordes yrreverentlye of Your Majestie, other that doo mysuse any of Your Majesties subjectes in thies parties, otherwise then with favour and gentlenes, She woll see hyt so ponyshed, that noone shall have cause to compleyn therof hereafter. And of thys She requyred me to advertyse Your Majestie. I tolde the President that I hadd compleyned heretofore to the Commyssaries appoynted to procede here with M^r Reede and me, for reformation of suche injuries as Your Majesties subjectes pretende to suffre in Andwarp, upon the ryver there, by shipmen hurlynge stoones into your subjectes shippes privylye, and cuttinge of theyr cables, and doinge other shrowede turnes divers tymes, wherby your subjectes were very evyll grevyde. Wherunto we were aunswered, that yf any such might be provyde, hee shulde be ponyshyde to thexample of all other. The President sayde there shulde bee provision made therin, for thoffycer there shulde have an ordre gyven hym to serche for suche evyll doers, that, yf any suche happyn, hee shall not scape unknowyn or unponyshed.

Farther he sayde he hadd in charge of the Quene to enquire of me, whether I hadd receved any answer from Your Majestie concernynge the Scotcs, whether Your Majestie ys in peax with them or not; for the Frenchmen doo clerly saye that they be comprehended in the peax, yet the Quene here woll not so take hyt, tyll She maye be advertysed therof from Your Majestie. Wherof She requyred me tadvertyse the same, prayinge that She maye knowe the truthe therin, to the intent to ordre theyr affayres here accordingly, for She estemyth hyt very expedient to bee knownen. For the which She haeth sende oone of hyre Secretaries to Scotlonde purposlye.¹

¹ Vaughan wrote to Paget from Antwerp on the 29th of July, "I have byn lately infourmyd by an Englysshe man, that came out of Seland, that there was a Herault of Scotland accompanyed with a gentleman of these partes, lately despeched from the Lady Regentes Courte, to go into Scotland."

Fourthlye, She willed hym to shewe me that divers noble men of thEmperours subjectes here, which hadd landes within the Countye of Bolonoys, doo make importune sute to Hyr, to knowe wheare they shall sue for theyr seyde landes, to Your Majestie, or elles to the Frenche Kynge; for the whiche She haeth sende to the Frenche Kynge, to knowe whether Hee haeth in the agrement of the peax with Your Majestye dischargyd them of theyr othes. From Whome She haethe receyvede answer, which She woll not belyve to bee true, tyll She maye hyre from Your Majestie. For, as the President showed me, the Frenchmen doo playnly saye that the Countye of Bolonoys ys theirs; sayng divers other thinges, which nother hee, nother the Quene doeth belive. I sayde Your Majestie hadd the seyde Countie by juste conquest, wherby all the landes there be at Your Majesties disposition, as shulde please You. And yf any of theyr subjectes do entende to have any landes there, hyt were meyte for theym to sue to Your Majestie for hyt, Who hade the landes in quyet possession. Hee sayde, yf they shulde sue to Your Majestie, they shulde runne in indignation of the Frenche Kynge, to Whom they bee sworne alredye; and yf they shulde sue to the Frenche Kynge, they shulde rune in indignation of Your Majestie. Therfor She requyrithe me to signifye thys to Your Majestie, to the intent She might knowe Your Majesties pleasir therin, and theracordinge make answer to the seyde suters.

Thys I thought expedient to advertise Your Majestie of, accordinge to my most bounden dutye. Moste humbly beseechinge Your Highnes to take thys my doinges, accordinge to your moste accustomed clemencye, in good and gracious parte.

And, Sir, as touchinge occurrantes here, the seyde Presydent showed me for truthe, that this day the Countye de Buyre doo sett forwardes towards Germainye, havinge his armye full and well furnyshede bothe for fotmen and horsemen. Hee haethe fyve thowsen horsemen; for wheare the Landesgrave thought to bee sure of all the horsemen abowt Coloyne, the Countye du Buyre haeth soo handeled the mattier, that hee haethe disapoynted hym, and haeth theym with hym for thEmperor, which bee fyften hundrith horsemen. The Landesgrave went abowte to staye that quartier, wheare thEmperor laboryde for horsemen in dede, which quartier the President dyd not specyfye, and the meane season loste thoose that hee thought hymself sure of, and thother alsoo. The Landesgrave wolde a hadd horsemen owt of Clevelande, and can not, the Dewke woll not suffre hym, in soo moche as, the President showed me, the Countye du Buyre ys farre above hym in horsemen. And that the moste parte of the Landesgraves armye bee of the paysantes of the countree, and nother in numbere, nother strength, as hee ys spokyn of; for, hee sayde, sayde, they here knewe hyt for truthe. As for fotmen they saye hyre for truthe the Countye de Buyre haeth 40 enseignies. As touchinge thEmperor, the seyde President sayde the Quene hadd noo worde from Hym, syns the 14th of the laste, but hyt ys thought that by thys tyme hee ys in camppe all redye. The Bissshop of Coloyn haeth assembled the chief of his subjectes, and haeth given them in charge (as hyt ys sayde here) to showe all the favor that maye bee to thEmperors armye, passinge that weye, and to lett theym have victaylles and all necessities for theyr money, throwe owte hys lande. Hee showed me alsoo that the Landesgrave ys precheurs doo preche that thEmpereur makythe thys warre to putt downe the true Worde, and thEmpereurs precheurs doo preache that thys warre ys only ageynste rebellious and disobedientes, for rebellonye and disobedientie. Other occurrantes I can not hyre of. And thys I beseche Almighty God to conserve Your moste Excellent Majestie in longe lyeff and helthe. From Bruxelles, the furste of Auguste.¹

MCCCCVI. LISLE and TUNSTALL to KING HENRY VIII.

Y^T may please Your moast excellent Majestye to be advertised, that the 30th of this last monethe we came to Fountayne le Bleu, where we, Your Majesties Commissioners, had our chambers prepared for us veray richelye appoynted, and all the noblemen and gentlemen, beyng your servauntes, were lodged within the house reasonably well. The rest of our trayne lodged all togethurs at a village cauled Morret, oone leage from the Courte, and all others dislodged there for our trayne onelye. That night some of the noble men and gentlemen were desyeryd to see the daunsyng and pastyme of the Court, the King beyng present; which they dyd. And the nexte daye the King gave us pastyme at the hart of force, and dyned in a meane house in the forrest. And that night at after supper all the noble men and gentlemen were allso desyeryd to come to daunce, fyndyng a chamber richely haunged, and the yong noblemen and yong ladies wonderfull richely apparellyd. The nexte daye, beyng Sondaye the first of this present, yerly in the mornyng the President Raymon and Bochetel were sent unto us to se our commissions, and the othe which we wold have the King to swere, and after they had seane yt, they seamed to like yt veray well, desyeryng us to let them have the same with them to shewe to the Chauncellour and others of the Counsaill, and they wold bring yt cleane written in parchment to the chappell, where the King hard masse. In the saied othe we had put Your Majesties hole title and style, of the which they have alteryd nothyng but "Francie," as Your Majestye shall perceave by the same subscribed by the King, the copie wherof Your Highnes shal receave herewith.¹ As touchyng all the rest of your stile the French King wold not suffer any of his Secretaryes to reade the othe, but redde yt Hym self openlye, and pronounced yt with such a lowde voyce, that all the people might here yt, declaring Your Majestye Defendour of the Faith and Supreme Heed of the Church of England and Ireland, beyng there present syxe Cardynalles, besydes dyvers others greate States and Bisshoppes.

The same daye at an other masse, after the King had taken his othe, there was a greate mariadge betwene the Duke de Guise his second sonne cauled

the Marques de Mayne¹, and one of Madam la Graunt Seneshalles doughters; and that daye at dynner we dyned with the King at his bourdes end, accompayned with the Cardynalles of Lorrain and Ferrare.

At after dynner the King devised with me the Bisshop of Duresme of his librarye, and (perceaving that I was not hable to stand uppon my foote) made me sytte downe, and Hym self stood and talked with me, caulying me, your Admirall, and his Admirall unto Hym, and allso Master Wotton, kepyng us talke a while of such bookes as He had caused to be translated out of Greake into Frenche, aswell of Generall Counsaill, as other auncient storyes. And, theis matters finisshed, He wold nedes have me, your Admirall, to se his house; at which tyme I toke occation to present M^r Wotton as Your Majesties Ambassadour unto Hym²; whome He gentilly receaved, byddying hym at all tymes and houres to be bold of Hym for your affayres, and he shulde fynd Hym readye. Then (leading me by thande into his owne lodgynges, and into a veray fayre greate gallerye, and allso to his baynes and hote houses) He caused all the noblemen and gentlemen to followe Hym. And that after noone there was a greate justyng, which the Dolphyn made in thonour of the mariadge, sendyng unto me to do hym thonour to gyve hym a staffe; the which I dyd. And, after the justes doon, he sent me a goodly jennet, richely saddled and harnessyd, to my lodgyng. That night there was a greate bancket made to the Quene, and all the ladies; and after that, twoo riche maskes, wherin the King Hym self was in one, and the Dolphyn in thother. And after that a voydye. The next daye He wold not let us to depart, but seyed I shuld goe with Hym ones agayne to thassemblye. And after the killyng of a hart of force, He went to his toyles, and shewed us sporte at the wild boore. Sundry tymes by the waye He held purposes with me of dyvers thynges, to long to reherse in writyng, the which I shall declare unto Your Majestye at my commyng; which, God willyng, shalbe shortly. This daye we are departed from the Court, and came this night to this towne, eight leages in our waye homewardest

From thence thAdmirall goith straight to Rouen, and entendith to imbark uppon Sondag or Monday nexte at the furdest.

From Parrys, I thAdmirall, intend to come in post towards Your Majestye, trustyng to be with Your Highnes too or 3 dayes before the Admirall of Fraunce, who, as I can perceave, myndeth not to tary with Your Majestie passyng 3 or 4^{er} dayes at thuttermost.

To morowe the King removith from Fountayn le Bleau towards Molyns. M^r Knyvet ys soore sick of a hoothe fevre at Mellune, but with Goddes leave in no daunger. As touchyng our rewardes, we cannot as yet certifye Your Majestye the valew, nor what yt ys, for Morret (who goith with us to Parrys) seith the same ys prepared there for us. Assoone as yt ys knowen, Your Majestie shall have wourd with diligence. Asfor our fare and our chere, hath been excedding greate, and one of the Master Dotelles with other officers goith back with us asfar as Parrys agayne, and prepareth an ordinary table for all the noblemen and gentlemen. And as touchyng Morret hym self, if continuall attendaunce and diligent service uppon us, your servauntes, can expresse his good will towards Your Majestie, I assure Your Highnes there ys no lack of the same. ¹ From a minute, corrected by Paget, it appears that the Council on the last of July wrote to Lisle, that the Scots were preparing a power against England under pretence of recovering certain small holds taken from them during the war, which would oblige Henry to prepare for resistance: and conveyed the King's directions to Lisle and his colleagues to express to Francis Henry's expectation that Francis would not only refuse the Scots aid, but also give them good advice, and inform them that He would suffer Henry and them to try their wars together.

MCCCCVII. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to CARNE.¹

AFTER OWE harty commendations. The Kinges Highnes hath hardde your letters of the first of this instaunt, and hath commaunded us to signifie unto yow that His Majeste taketh your advertisementes declared in the same in right goodd and thankefull parte. For answer whereunto yow shall undrestand, that His Highnes wolleth yow to take occasion, aswell for this purpose, as for other thinges that yow shall receyve herewyth, to repayre unto Presydent Schore, and to shew unto hym that His Majeste, having receyved your letters towching such thinges as lately passed betwene yow, hath willed yow to say that His Highnes taketh his worddes, signified unto yow from the Quene, in very thankefull parte; nott dowghting, butt that the dedes shall follow as apperteyneth, lyke as His Majeste woll nott fayle to have suche respect to the good handling and using of thEmperours subgettes wythin His Highnes dominions, as doth belong to the strayght and parfyght amitie betwene them. And severally His Highnes wolleth thanks to be geven to the sayde President Schore, who, by his communication hadde wyth yow, semeth well to tendre thimportance of your just complayntes.

Towching the Skottes, trewth is that there was a certeyne qualified comprehension of them in the conclusion of the late peax, the very worddes whereof yow shall receyve herein enclosed, whiche we sende to yow signed with the hande of me, Sir William Paget, in autentique forme, to thintent yow may show the same to the seyde Presydent Schore. Sythen whiche tyme we have absteyned from all kindes of invasion, as lykewise they have not muche molested us, and yett we hire lately that they ar nott so quiett as reason wolde that peasable men sholde be. These ar the very worddes of theyre comprehension, whiche ys in cace, and all that for this tyme we can signifye unto yow touching this effect.

Concernyng the request of such noble men as hadde landes and lyvinges in the Cownty of Boulloynoyes, yow shall undrestande that where immediately upon the wyning of the same there was a couvenaunt made for suche as cowlde reasonably make clayme to any thing wythin the sayde cownty; no maner of suche as yow mention in your letters, ether by themselffes or by any other meane, cutred, ether than, or after, for theyre declaration on this behalf. Sythen whiche tyme, His Majeste, having kept the cowntrey as a thing conquered by just warre, hath finally receyved the same peasably, by composition, in this last treatye of the peax. So that suche as have hadde in those parties in tyme past, during such season as itt was in the Frenche Kinges handes, any kinde of possession, must seke unto Hym for recompense thereof accordingly.

His Majestes farther pleasure is that yow shall diligently sew to the Regent, and suche as apperteyneth, for the restitution of Dymocke to his accustomed hawnt and trade in the Low Countreis. And towching suche letters and testimonialles as yow desire to have for the declaration of the mysordring att Dorte, the same shall be sent to yow wyth diligence. And thus we bedde yow most hartly well to fare. From Westminster, the day of August, 1546.

MCCCCVIII. CARNE to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

PLEASYTHE yt your moste honorable Lordshipes. Upon the recept of your moste honorable letters of the 8th of thys, sent by Nycolas the post, who arryved here the 12th of the same, I spake with the President Schore. To whome accordinge to my dutie and charge, declared the Kinges Majesties pleasure signyfiede to me in your seyde letters, gevinge thanks to the seyde President accordinge to Hys Highnes ys commandement, who dyd seme to rejoyse not a lytle that hyt pleased Hys Majestie that I shulde gyve hym any such thanks, for to doo that (as he sayde) hys dutye requyred hym to doo, boeth towardes Hys Majeste and also hys subjectes.

As touchinge the comprehension of the Scotese in the conclusion of the late peax, I showed hym the seyde comprehension to be so qualifiede, as appered by the article of the treatye sent me undre autentike signe, conferred with the originall, which I showyd hym. When he hadd redde hyt, he sayde the article was darke, and that hyt semede the Frenchmen hadd no greate regarde to the Scotese, and further prayede me to leve the sayde article with hym. I sayde I had no comyssion but to shewe hyt hym, and that I coulde not transgresse the limites of my charge; therfor prayede hym to have me excusede. Hee sayde hyt wer expedient he had hyt, to the intent to satisfie the Scotese, that dayly suyth to hym here; consideringe, as he sayde, that the Kinges Majestie by the treatye coulde not agre with the Scotcs without thEmperor, nother thEmperor without the Kinges Majestie, therfor he wolde gladly kepe hyt with hym. I sayde I wolde write to knowe the Kinges Majesties pleasur therin, whether he shulde have hyt or not, wherin I besech your Lordships that I maye knowe what to doo.

And when I hadd declaryd to hym farther Hys Highnes ys pleasur touchinge such noble men of thys countre as had landes in the Countie of Bollonoys, in such sorte as suche as had any kynde of possessions there in tymes past, duringe such seasen as hyt was in the French Kinges handes, must seeke to hym for recompence therof. Of that aunswer he moche mervelyde, and sayde the French Kynge, by composition, coulde not gyve thEmperors subjectes landes, and that the Kinges Majestie had no cause to deprive them of their landes and livinges, they beinge His Majesties freindes, and in his servyce in the same warres for the wynnyng of Bollogne, with the Countye du Buyre. Therfor he sayde hyt wer very sore, that they shuld lese their landes, and be dryven to sue for a recompence to hym that haeth not the seyde landes. I sayde I had no other aunswer to make hym; neverthesse I prayde hym to wey well, that the Kinges Majestie wan the seyde Countye by just conquest, and so, afre the conquest, kept hyt, to hys infynyt chardges, without that any man, or then, or afre, entrede any declaration, or by themselves or by any other meane on that bihalff, and sithen haethe received the same peaseably, by composition, in thys last treatye, so that Hys Majestie maye use justly all the landes there, asshall seme best for hys commyn welth. And receyvinge hyt peceably by composition of the French Kinge in the treatie also, reason wolde that suche recompence as ought to be made, shulde be sought at the French Kinges handes, and not at the Kinges Majesties handes. He sayde that yt ys sore that His Majestie shulde use hys conquest ageynst those, that then were, and be yet, his freindes. And then sayde farther that thys matier ys waightie, therfor prayde me to have my aunswer therin in writinge, seyng the Kinges Majestie receved the same by composition in the last treatye, to the intent they might have somme grownde to stave apon with the French Kinge thereaboutes. I sayde I had no comyssion to gyve them any writinge therof, but to make hym aunswer accordinge as my instructions specyfeth. Therin me thought he was not satisfyede.

Then I was in hande with hym for M^r Dymockes restitution, wherof I hadd spookyn to hym divers tymes before, and showyd hym that I had recevede another commandement at thys tyme from the Kinges Majestie, to sue diligently to the Quene here for hym, prayinge hym that I might knowe the Quenes pleasur therein. He sayde the Quene ys very lothe to restore hym, forbicause he ys thEmperors naturall subject. Yf he were an Englishman, She sayde, She might soner pardon hym. I tolde hym that he ys an Englishman sune, and dwellith in Englande, and takyn for an Englishman, and the Kinges Majesties servant, and that the fault pretendyd ageynst hym ys not soo great, as the information was made here; as shall appere by a testimoniall that hee haeth from Dort. Therfor I trusted She woll not staye in so smalle a matier. He desierede to have the testimoniall, and then he wolde perswade with Hyre what he might therein. I thought best to move the matier to hym, forbicause hyt must comme throwe hys handes, yf hyt bee had; as all other thinges that passyth here dothe. Therfor hyt were necessarie I had the seyde testimoniall sent me, and then I shall follow hyt accourdinge to my dutie.

The 11th of this very late arrivede here a post from thEmperor, who haeth brought the certentie of the arrivall to thEmperor to Ratisbon of 12 thowsen Italiens sent from the Bisshop of Rome with the Dewke of Cameryne, and that the Spanyardes be also comme thyther, some saye thre thowsen, and somme saye 8 thowsen. Hys hoole army ys fyfty thowsen, full redy as hyt is reported. The Landsgrave with hys army ys within 10 leages of Ratisbon, and haeth byn thys fortnight, as somme of thEmperors Court haeth writen to theyr freindes here for a truthe, and hath, as thEmperials sayth, 24 thowsen with hym. The Countie du Buyre goeth straight to thEmperor with hys army, by Maguntia, and haeth past the river of the Mosell allredy towards Maguntia. His journey is the slowre, for he conveyth with hym many peaces of greate artillerie. They saye here thEmperor wull retorne hyther shortely to lye here the next wynter. Other occurantes I hyre of nonne. And thus I besech Almightye God to conserve your moste honorable Lordshipes in longe and prossperous lyef. From Bruxelles, the 15th of August, 1546.

MCCCCIX. GREY, MOYLE, and PALMER to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

IT may like your good Lordshippes tunderstand, that uppon the receipt of the Kinges Majestes comyssion touching the lymyttes¹, I the Lord Graye gave knowlaige therof unto Mouns^r de Bies, and of the names and qualities of the Commyssioners, who aunswered, that Mouns^r de Hely, Mouns^r de Courtbaron et Honvaux, and Mouns^r de L. gy Tresourer of Bullonoyes, shuld be at Deversne uppon Monday last past, to conferre with ours uppon Tuisday folowing; and afterward perceaving that I, the Lord Grey, wold not be there onles he came himself, sent word he was sory he had put Mouns^r de Hely to the paynes to be there, for he had appointed him to mache with me, wherin he was sufficiently aunswered, so as in thende he deferred our meting untill Wenesday folowing, which day M^r Wotton being sik, we Sir Thomas Moyle and Sir Thomas Palmer, being at Clamarry² by 8 of the clocke in the mornyng, it was shewed us, that the French Comyssioners had sent thider to knowe if we were arryved there; wherupon we sent word to them, if they wold come fourthe, we wold mete with them upon the way, if they thought it good. Imedyatly they came towards Clamarry, and when they were somewhat nyer, we passed the water and encountred with them; and after embrasing thone thother, they asked if we wold go aboutes the lymyttes; we said it was mete that we furst conferred to gether; and they agreid therunto, and alighted. We desyred to see their comyssion, which they shewed us; and they in likewise requyred to see ours, which we delyvered them. In ther comyssion nether was the wordes of the treatye for the tryall of the two braunches Keakes and Vilmountiers expressed, nether the names of the Com-

myssioners, but a blank left for them; which when wee had well seen and consulted aparte, we came agayne to them, and asked what was ther names; thone said he was Mouns^r de Framosell, thother Mouns^r de Courtbaron. We asked if they knew the wordes of the treatye touching theeffect of ther comyssion; they sayde “yea,” and shewed a paper contaynyng certayne generall wordes for the lymyttes; but no mention for the tryall of Kekes and Villemountiers. We asked them what they said touching those 2 braunches; they aunswered, they could say no more those 2, then they could of any other, that the head was lyke to spring out of, for it was unknowen to them that difference was left in those twoo only. We said then that, if they were Commyssioners, as they appeared not to us, for that ther names was not in the commyssion, nor yet Mouns^r de Framosell named in Mouns^r de Bies letter, declaring the names of the Commyssioners to my Lord Grey, we wold not treat with them. They were somewhat abasshed withall, and said, “you shall have “our names put in the commyssion forthwith before you.” We demaunded if they could shew commyssion to doo it; and they said, non other then the letter of Mouns^r Marschall de Bies, which they offred to shew us, but we refused to leese any more tyme, sith they were no better instructed in the matter we shuld treate of. In the wynding up they desyred to have the wordes of the treatye which was in our commyssion touching Keakes and Villemountiers, saing they doubted not to be thoroughly enformed therof, eather at Mouns^r de Bies hand or at the Court, whether they thought Mouns^r de Bies wold send, if it neded; and both for that, and for the commyssion, we shuld within a day or twoo be advertysed what shuld be don in it. We refused not ther request, which when they had taken out those wordes, we toke leave of either, and departed. And, as we shall furder procede, we shall advertise your Lordshippes. So praying to God to preserve you in honourable helth. From Bulloyn, the 17th of August, 1546.

MCCCCX. WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

IIT may please Your Majestie to be advertised, that the French King taking his journey from Fontayne Bleau towards Molyns, I retourned to Parys¹ to provyde myself of certayn thinges necessarye for me for that journey; and that doonne, I followed after the French Kinges trayne. And being at a place called Chasteau Neuf by Loyre, the 12th of this present I receyved a letter of Your Majesties directed to the French King, with an other letter to me from M^r Secretarye Paget, declaring what I sholde saye and doo at the deliverye of the said Your Majesties letter to the French King. Wheruppon I made the more haste to followe Hym; but his lodgings were, even to the chief abowte Hym, soo uncertayn, that it was more easye for me to owte ryde Hym than to overtake Hym. And soo the 18th of this present I arrived at Molyns, whyther I knewe assuredlye He wolde comme; and the French King came thither the morowe after, verye late, soo that it was the 20th of this present, er I coulde have accesse to Hym. At what tyme, as soone as He hadd dyned, I spake with Hym, declaring Your Majesties request for Talarts pardon according to thinstructions sent me by M^r Paget.² But it appered verye well, that the King hadd full determenid before, what aunswere He wolde make me, for He shewed me that He knewe verye well that Your Majestie hadd been sewed to, to requyre it of Hym, and that He knew that I came to Hym for that purpose, but He sayed that the case committed by Tallart was soo "infame" (for that worde He used) and soo detestable, that He coulde not forgive it. He sayed that He wolde gladly doo for Your Majestie, his good brother, enye thing that leye in Hym for to doo; but He knewe right well that, if Your Majestie were truelye enfourmed of the mater, Yourself wolde not thinke it reasonable to be graunted. He called it a prepensed murdre and treason, and that he hadd worne the Redde Crosse and cryed, "Bourgoigne, Bourgoigne," and with soo odiousse wordes made the mater as grevous as he might. I sayed unto Hym, that Your Majestie toke not th'offence to be lytle; for, if You didde, I sayed that a requeste, not soo earnest as it pleased You now to make unto Hym, might have seemed sufficient for it, betwixte two such frendes; but Your Majestie, taking thoffence to be greate, made nowe the more earneste request unto Hym for it; and the greater the fawte sholde be founde, the more thankefullye You wolde accepte the pleasure that He sholde doo You in it. And yet, I sayed, that the matier well examyned and tryed, I trusted it wolde not be founde soo grevous, as it seemed summe hadd borne Hym in hande that it was (for in deede Madame de Bellay herself, and other of Talartes frendes, have shewed me, that they doubt not but that it shall not appere that he ware the Redde Crosse or cryed “ Bourgoigne ”). But the King aunswered me, that it was soo as He hadd sayed, for He hadd caused inquisicion to be made of it: how be it, if it were not founde to be soo, then He wolde have regarde to Your Majesties, his good brothers, request; and els, bothe You and He were bounden to minstre justice in such cases. I sayed unto Hym, that, whether he hadd committed all those thinges that were layed unto his charge, I cowde take no knowledge uppon me of it, but referred myself to the processe that was or sholde be made theruppon, and though I was in verye good hope, by that I hadd herde of the matyer alredye, that it sholde not all be founde true; yet it seemed to me that though he hadd worne the Redde Crosse in deede (the which me thought was the thing that prycked the King), yet in summe case that might be soo doone as sholde not be taken for treason, for that was a stratageme often used in warres, for them of the oone parte to weare theyr ennemyes crosses, and to fayne themselves to be of theyr companye, to thintent therby the better to deceyve theyr ennemyes. “ Yea, marye,” quod the French King, “ to thintent “ to deceyve thennemyes; but this manne didde it to thintent to kylle and “ murdre a good gentlemanne of his owne countrey.” “ Sir,” quod I, “ my “ meanyng was, that it is not ever the wearing of thennemyes markes or “ crosses, that maketh a manne a traytour, soo it be not doone of an unfaithfull “ and trayterouse mynde and harte to his Prynce; and I beleve that there is “ no manne in Fraunce, howe moch soever he hate Talart, that will saye that “ he beleveth that ever he ware the Redde Crosse for enye unfaithfull or “ trayterouse mynde that he bare unto You. And though in deede it is “ bothe Your Majesties partes to minstre justice, yet soo is it also sumtymes “ your partes to shewe merceye.” And as for justice, I sayed, He might everye daye cause it to be ministred, but He sholde not have everye daye occasion to shewe Your Majestic such a pleasure as He might doo nowe. And I wolde have spoken further such thinges, as me thought wolde have served sumwhat for the purpose; but the King interrupting me, and sayeng unto me that his Admyrall sholde make Your Majestic such an aunswere hereupon as He trusted sholde content You, rose upp, and wente his waye, sumwhat sumwhat in a cholere, and not mynding to here anye more of it, as it seemidde.

This is all that I coulde doo with Hym in this matier, wherof I have sent worde to Madame de Bellay by hym that brought Your Majesties letters. Surelye this Talart is well favored and frended in this Courte, and the Dolphin hymself and the ladye his wief sent el Segnor Petro Strozso unto me, sith my comminge to this towne, to shewe me the good wille that they beare unto hym, and to requyre me not onelye for Your Majesties sake, but sumwhat also for theyr sake, to take the more paynes in this matier. They see the King take this matier soo earnestlye here, that no manne wolde seeme to be a sewter for hym, but onelye Madame de Bellay, who takith all uppon her. This daye, being the morowe after that I hadd spoken with the French King, came to me the Generall Bayart, sent as he sayed from the King his maister to shewe me his maister remembred not well, whether He hadd made me well perceyve howe greate thoffence was that Tallart hadd committed. For likeas He desyered nothing more then to satisfye Your Majesties mynde and request in all that He might, soo He doubted not but that Your Majestic, knowing the trueth, wolde not fynde it reasounable to requyre enye such thing of Hym. And there he sayed that Tallart, being in the Kinges service uppon the frontiers, and hering that Des Maretz his ennemye was comminge thither to, to serve the King, assembled certayne of the naughtye sorte that he cowde pyke owte in those partyes, and withoute licence of theyr capitaynes, he and his said fellowes departed from theyr charge and came a greate waye backe, purposelye to murdre the said Dez Maretz, disguising themselves, and wearing theyr ennemyes crosses and cryeng "Burgoigne," and soo murdered hym in deede, going to doo his Prynce service, and being better able to doo Hym service then Tallart was; and all this upon a naughtye querell, that is to saye, forbycause that the sayed Dez Maretz hadd slayne the said Tallartes brother in his owne defence, the which was soo well proved to be doone cum modera-mine inculpate tutele, that he never sewed to the King for no pardon, but obteyned it of the Chauncelour by ordinarye sute of the lawe, notwithstanding that Tallart and his frendes withstoode it asmuch as they cowde. And here Bayart beganne to playe the oratour, and made it the higheste kinde of cryme of lese majeste that cowde be; and fynallye concluded that, though the King his maister were this enfourmed of this mater, and that this being founde true, he doubted not but that Your Higheynes wolde not thinke it reasonable that suche an acte sholde be forgiven, but rather that every manne sholde runne uppon hym, comme contre ung loup ravissant; yet, forbycause Your Majestic

Majestie sholde perceyve howe much He desyereth to satisfye your requestes in all thing, He will sende to the place agayne, where the murdre was committed, and cause newe and diligent inquisicion to be made of the hole matier; and in cace it maye be founde that the deede be not soo haynous, but that it maye be forgiven, in contemplation of your request He will forgive it hym. He shewed me also that the said Tallart hadd committed, or caused to be committed, an other murther of late, sith the first murther. Wherunto I sayed that as for the Redde Crosse and the crye of Bourgoigne, the King hadd shewed me of it, but I remembred not that He sholde saye enye thing to me that he and his fellowes departed from theyr charge withoute licence: and that as for the Redde Crosses, and crye of Burgoigne, I hadd shewed the King what I thought in it then, and that sith that tyme I hadd enquired of it agayne, and was nowe in better hope then before, that it cowde never be proved true, but that rather the contrarye sholde be proved. As for that he sholde departe from his charge withoute licence, I sayed, if it were soo, it were not well; but yet I hadd been otherwise enfourmed: and that it pleased the King his maister to cause newe inquisicion to be doone, I thought, I sayed, the King cowde not enfourme Hymself to diligentlye of such a thing. And as for the desyre that the King shewed to have to satisfye Your Hieghnes request, I sayed I was verye gladde of it, and wolde advertise Your Majestie of it. As for the seconde murther, I sayed I hadd never harde of it, nor cowde not well beleve it; but rather hadd harde saye that Tallart hymself hadd been sore wounded. But Bayart sayed that in deede Tallart was wounded, and afterwarde hadd caused thother to be slayne. And surelye, in all his tale, Bayart used a greate vehemencye. But, after he was gonne, I spake with certayne of Tallarts freendes, who affyrme constantelye, that neither Tallart ware the Redde Crosse, nor cryed not Bourgoigne, nor hadde no charge, nor was in wages, when thacte was committed, nor the sayed Des Maretz was not slayne by hym; and that in case thies thinges be founde true, themselves ar content to suffre death with hym. And as for the seconde murther, they saye playnelye that he never committed it, nor caused it to be doone. Hit seemith to me that the Frenche King, considering that Tallart is not your subjecte, nor that there appereth to Hym no cause whye Your Hieghnes sholde make earnestlye this request, thinketh peraventure that You force not greatlye, whether You obteyne it or not; and that I was more earnest in setting forthe Your Majesties request then neded. Wherefore, if Your Majestie be yet mynded to helpe this manne, in my symple mynde the beste waye is, that, when thAdmyrall or other shall speake unto Your Majestie of this mater, to make them well perceyve that You desyre earnestelye to helpe hym in deede. And thus, having nothing els worthy advertisement at this tyme, I beseeche Jesus longe to preserve Your Majestie in health and all felycyte. Written at Moulins in Bourbonnoys, the 21th of August, 1546.

MCCCCXI. CARNE to PAGET.

PLEASVTH yt your Maystership. At the instance of Mr Damesell, the Kinges Majestes Agent in Andwarp, I sude for licence to transport 15 lastes of powdre for the Kinges Majestes provision, which hee hadd, as he sayde, commandement to sende over. For the which licence I sude accordingly. Wherin the President spake with the Quene here, Who, as he showed me, made hym thys aunswer, that duringe the Kinges Majestes warres, wherin His Higghnes was drevyn to occupye munition, She was alwaies contented to satisfye His Majestes desyre, aswell for powdre as all other munitions necessarye for Hym, and nowe thEmperour, beinge in warre, and also theyr powdre beyng destroyed by the thonder and lightnyng in Maghlyn of late¹, and cannot tell what powdre thEmperour shall have nede of; therfor trustythe the Kinges Majestie, beinge nowe owt of warre and havinge no nede, wull take pacience for a while, tyll She may knowe what nede thEmperour Hymself shall have. I tolde hym that thEmperours warres, leyinge in Germainy, coude not be ayded with powdre herehens, for hyt can not be conveyde to

¹ This calamity is thus described by Carne in a letter to Paget of the 9th:

“The same 7th daye at night abowt the howre of 10, beinge great lightnyng and thonder in the towne of Maghlyn, a towne wherin thEmperours store of powder was kept in the botome of the same towre, the powder tooke fyre (as hyt ys thought) by the lightnyng, and casted up the sayde towre e fundamentis. By the vyolence wherof and throwe the great peces of the towre that fell downe, werre beate downe sodenly such a nombre of howses that there were yesterdaie 200 and fyfty personnes, bygge and smalle, fownde dede. ThEmperours owne howse there ys beaten downe flate, and another goodlyer howse then hyt, of Mons’ de Haustrate, and all the Lombardes howses there, with dyvers other, as hit ys sayde here for truthe, and the moste part of the people that werre within them distroyde. And all happened, as they saye, by the sayd powder, which werre fyve hundryd fyrkens or smalle barrelles, or therabouts.”

Hym,

Hym, and that the Kinges Majestie hadd many fortresses which wull occupye no small thinge, and provision muste be made for them, and that thys was no great quantitie, and farther that hyt ys but a remanent of an olde bargeyn of powdre made more then 12 monethes past, for the which the Kinges Majestie haeth payd for longe or the peax was made, and nowe the marchant, havinge hyt redy in Andwarpe, for feare of the danger that ys in the kepyng of hyt, wolbe charged no lenger with hyt, and wull sett hyt forth in the stretes for the Kinges Majesties Agent there; so that, yf the Kinges Majestie maye have no licens to transport hyt, Hee shall lese his money and also the powdre, for the marchant wull kepe hyt no lenger. Therfor I praiede hym to conside that the Kinges Majestie shulde lese hyt, and thEmperour therby nothing the nere to powdre, and that thEmperour maye have asmoche as He will for his provision, of the marchantes, besydes that. He sayde that he wolde speeke with the Quene ageyn about hyt.

Then I was in hande with hym for Mr Dymockes restitution, as pythely as I coulede, showinge hym the testimonies had from Dordright, wherby appered what was sayde by hym and what by his adversaries. The President dyd rede the case conteynede in the declaration, and sayde that hee wolde over see and peruse thoriginal examminations, and enforme the Counsaile therof, and therapon I shulde know theyr resolution.

Then he told me howe that he hadd receyvede a letter from the Countie de Buyre yesternight, of his passage over the Rene the 23 of this, tharmye of the Protestantes beinge for to stay hym of thother parte of the ryver, and stayede the same passage, for a tyme, where he thought to have passed, viz^t of thys seyde Maguntia. And where there ys a nother passage at Maguntia, the sayde armye of the Protestantes hade gotten all the bootes of the passaiges to theyr handes, so that hee coulede by no meanes passe there. Notwithstondinge he made a cowntenance to make provision for his passage, where he thought firste to wyne the same, and sodenly with all diligence sende privylie, to another passage that was higher upon the ryver, five thousen foetmen, to wyne that before theyr enymys yf they coulede, and so they dyd, where they fownde 14th passinge bots, where the moste parte of the sayde five thowsen passed. Wherapon tharmye that wer dyrect of the other syde to the Countie de Buyre, hyringe of the passaige of the seide foetmen, sende a numbre of theyr men thether, to staye there, wherbye was a fortresse callyde Waloppe longinge to the Bisshop of Maguntia, which fortresse might a troblede them sore in theyr passaige. The Protestantes came to that fortresse, and wolde nedes have entered theyr with theyr streyngh. They

of the saide fortresse made them aunswer they shulde not. Thother thretenede to have hyt by force, without takinge one to mercye that wer within, but all shulde passe throwe the swerde. That notwithstandinge, they wer kept owt, and a numbre of the Countie de Buyres men receved yn, wherby they kept the passaige from the Protestantes tyll the hoole five thowsen wer past them. The hoole troppe that wer direct contrary to Mons^r de Buyre, hyringe of thyr passaige at the other ferye, and how they hadd the forte ther, fearede lest they wolde a takyn another forte therby, longinge to them, drewe thetherwardes all, levinge the passaige fre for Mons^r de Buyre, who passed horse and man bagge and baggage, without the losse of man or horsse or eny other thinge. At the other passaige was there a lytle byckeringe, but no great hurt. Upon the landinge of Mons^r de Buyre and drawinge towardes them, the Protestantes armye fiede, levinge the fortresse that they hadd, and all. They wer not above 15 ensignes of foetmen and 300 horsemen, but they lookyde for the Countie of Oldinburgh, that shulde have commyn to them with 16 enseignes of foetmen and 800 horsmen more; but he was not arryvede within a leage of the seyde passaige on the other syde of the Rene. 3500 horsmen more mett the Countie de Buyre to reinforce hys armye, and to joyne with hym for thEmperour, and as I harde (but not by the President) provyded by the Bisshop of Maguntia, the Bisshop of Treves, and the Bisshop of Colong, soo that hee haeth of horsmen above 8000 in hys armye without dowt; and puttyth no dowt, nowe that hee is paste the Rene, of all the powre of the Protestantes, for in horsmen hee is farre above them, or thEmperours armye other, for thEmperor haeth with Hym but six thowsen horsmen in hys armye. Hee entendyth straight to thEmperour, Who with hys army ys besydes Langhut¹, as I wrote in my laste letters.² And yf the Landsgrave with his army returne from the siege of Engilstate³ to meyte with the seyde Countye de Buyre, thEmperour wull follow hym: yf he kepe the siege and not move, the County de Buyre wull streight to thEmperour. This the President showed me for truth, and that thEmperour haeth of foetmen in the towne of Engillstate 4000, and a thowsen horsmen, and all necessaries for them, and that the Protestantes begynne to lacke money. So that they here do not a lytle rejoyse of thys passaige, wher was no litle danger dowed. And, havinge no other, doo beseech Almightye

Syr, my duetye remembred. As I wrote to the Kinges Highnesse by my last letters, the Frenche Kinge takith Talarts matier so, that no bodye heere, but onelye poore Madame du Bellay, dare seeme to do enye thinge yn the world for hym. And, forbicause that it is supposidde that the Cardynal Bellay hathe written to the Kinges Highnesse for that mater; I am enfourmidde that diligent inquisition shal be made by Mons^r lAdmyrall, and suche as ar abowte hym, to learne now yn Englande, whether it be so or not. And yf it be fownde so, he is lyke to have greate displeasure for it. Wherefor he desyrith muche, not to be namidde to have written or sent for it. Neverthesse it maye well be sayde that Madame de Bellay wrote and sente for it, and that the Kinges Highnesse, yn contemplacion of summe service done to hym by theym of Bellay, (wheryn the sayde Cardinal, yf it please His Highnesse, maye be well yn nough namidde to) thinkinge to do theym all summe pleasur heeryn, was content to become intercessour to the Kinge his goode brother for the mater. And, yn cace enye thinge alredyc have ben sayde to thAdmyrall or enye of his, whereby they might gather that the Cardynall dydde wryte or sende for it: he desyrith muche that that may be so modifyedde and colouridde unto theym, yf it be possyble, that it was meanidde thereby, that Madame de Bellay wrote and sente; but that yn dedde the Kinges Highnesse tooke it that that thinge, that was done by her, was done by the Bellays, and by the Cardynall emonge other; and therefor His Majestye being content to become intercessour to his goode brother for the mater, thoughte yn dedde thereby not onelye to gratifye Madame de Bellay, but also the Cardinal and other the Bellayes, for her sake. Thus wolde he fayne have the mater shiftidde from hym, as muche as con-venyentlye maye be. And, bicause yow shall sumwhat the better perceyve what this mater meanithe, as farre as I can perceyve, this Cowrte is sumwhat bandidde and diwydidde. The chief of the one parte ar thAdmyrall, the Cardinal Tournon, and such other. The chief of the other, ar les Dammes, and on that syde the Cardinal Bellay. Now, al be yt that peraventure thAdmyral cowde be content that Tallart wer holpen, for as muche as he is the Cardynal Tournons nepveu, yet wolde all that syde (as I suppose), rather then a greate summe of money, fynde the meanes to have suche a thinge to laye to the Cardinal Belays charge; the which will go nigh to caste hym owte of favour, yf the Kinge be persuadidde that he have done it yn deede; as it wille peraventure easelye be persuadidde Hym, seing that He dothe more then halfe suspecte it all redye. And Madame dEstampes, who hathe of late gotten hym a goode Bisshopryke¹, to the greate displeasur of tother parte, as it seemithe, wolde I suppose be mervelouse lothe that suche a fawte shulde be fownde yn hym, whome she had so muche so latelye commendidde. Thus maye yow see, that the Cowrte everye where is the Cowrte; that is to saye, a place, where is usidde goode shouldering and liftinge at eche other.

The General Bayart saythe that the Protestantes have a mervelouse great armye, the which he estymithe at fiftye thowsand footemenne and 18 thowsend horse menne; the which to me seemith a very greate nombre. He saith that, all though thEmperours succour owte of Italye be now joynidde with suche as He hathe gatheridde yn Germanye, yet thItalyens, being not above 10 thousand, his hole armye is not above 24 thowsend menne; so that thEmperour dare not adventure to fighte, being no greater nombre. But lyke as He forsooke Regensburgh, and fledde to Landzhut, so now the Protestantes approaching to Hym and taking almoste al the townes of Bayerland, He shall be fayne to withdraw Hym selfe thence, and, as it is thoughte, towards Vienna.

He saithe that the Protestantes have gotten the treatye, that was made yn Switzerland betwixte thEmperour and the Bisshop of Rome, wherby apperith playnelye that thEmperour movith not this warre against certeyn rebelles onelye, as is pretendidde, but that the leage is made generallye against all the Protestants. Wherefor the Switzers now beginne to take parte with the Protestantes. He saith that Mons^r de Bure, perceyving that the Duke of Wirtenbergh was comming with a powre to meete hym, is retyridde backe and drawith now homewarde. But thEmperours Embassadour tellithe me that the

Kinge of Dennemarke and the Kinge of Swede have declaridde that They will not meddle with this matter, but wille keepe the peace made with thEmperour; and so saith he, will the Easterlinges to: and that he heerith that thEmperour and the Protestantes will not fighte, but ar agreede, and the Protestantes have submitted theym selves. And thItalyen Embassadours heere saye, that it hath not ben knowne yn menye hundridde yeres, that suche an armye of Italyens wente owte of Italye, as is now gone to thEmperour, the whiche they estyme at 20 thowsend besydes the Spaignardes. And thus all tales do not agree; but it seemith to me that not onelye it is true that Virgile saithe, “qui amant ipsi sibi somnia fingunt,” but it is also even as true, “qui oderunt “ ipsi sibi somnia fingunt.”

The Frenche King lyethe stille at Chavaignes, a villaige 3 leages hence, and is not yet knowne when nor whither He wille go thence. And thus Jesu preserve yow longe yn helthe and prosperite. Scryblidde yn haste, at Molins yn Bourbonnois, the 28th of August, 1546.

Yo^{rs} ever to comãde,

MCCCCXIV. KING HENRY VIII. to THE DAUPHIN.¹

Mons^r mon Cousin. Jay receu les lettres, quelle Me aves mande par Mons^r l'Admyral, le Seigneur Dennebault, et ay prynse grand playsir d'avoir entendue par luy la bon affection, que vous portes a ceste amitie entre le Roy vostre pere, et vous assurant que Je ne fauldra vous faire entendre le semblable de mon coste la ou loccasion soffrira, et pource que le dict Seigneur Admyral vous scaura bien dire de noz nouvelles, Je vous dira a Dieu, au quel Je prie vous donner, Mons^r mon bon cousin, bone vie et longue.

MCCCCXV. Thanswer of the KINGES MAJESTE unto suche matier as MESSIRE BRUNO proponed to His Majeste the 30th daye of August, 1546, immediately after his retorn out of Allemane, whider His Majeste sent him for certein affaires; uppon which answer he maye the better procede at this present with the Landsgrave and suche other the Princes Protestantes on His Majestes behalf, as he shall think convenyent.²

FIRST, His Majeste thanketh the Landsgrave most hertely, for that he offreth him self to His Majestes service, and promiseth to serve none other Prince, nor to take other pension, and that also he will furnishe His Majeste when he shalbe required of the sayd Majeste and at the charge of the same with so many horsemen and fotemen for the warre, as he maye convenyently prepare; promising also to empeche as myche as lieth in him that none of his subjectes, nor others by passage thorow his cuntre, shall go to the service of any Prince against His Majeste. And uppon the foresayd promises His Majeste is pleased to accept him to be his frend servant and counsailour, and ys contentyd to give him yearly for a pension 12 thousand florins, to be payed at suche termes and places as shalbe thought convenyent.

Seconde, in cas the Princes States and Cities of the League Protestantes woll send hither to His Majeste with diligens certein Commissioners fully instructyd and authorised to conclude a league defensyve with His Majeste, bringing with them the names of all the membres of the league, whiche be bound to ayde the rest of the same league, and what ayde every of them ys bounde to give, how myche, and in what cases, with declaration also from them, now that His Majeste dothe enter league with them, whether they will stand styll to the rates of the ayde already conventyd betwene them, or agre to suche newe rates and maner of ayde, as to those which shalbe sent, and to His Majeste, shalbe thought convenient: in thies cases aforesayde His Majeste ys pleased to enter league with them defensive against all maner of men and for all maner of causes, and wilbe bound, for his portion, to suche a rate of ayde, as to the qualite of His Majeste and his reputation in respect of other Princes in the same league shall require; so as also He maye have the fyrst and principal place in the league, and that for more honour the same league maye be called from the tyme of their confederacy, the League Christen; with suche conditions also, that none other shalbe admitted to the league then those which be already entred in to the same, without His Majestes consent; and that further His Majeste be not bound to give the ayde, wherunto He shalbe rated, but in suche cases as the holl league shalbe bound to ayde. In whiche case, as His Majeste will give his ayde in the defens of suche as shalbe invaded; so He loketh by covenant that all the rest shall ayde Hym for defens, every man with the ayde he covenanteth to give. And, forasmych as His Majeste supposeth they will loke for a greater ayde at hys handes in this treaty, then of any other Prince State or Cite, already in the same league, His Majeste will looke by covenant to have in all meetinges and assembles where the Crikesmen of the rest of the confederates shall fortune to mete, for any matier concerning the state of their confederacy and league, thre voyces to two of any other Prince State or Cites: thinking it also, forasmych as sundry membres of the sayd league do lye uppon the cooste of the sea, where they maye commodiously anoye diverse other estates, which maye peradventure attempt to offend sum of their confederates, that therfore it shalbe requisit that in the rating of the aydes, regard be had who maye anoye by sea, and what power they maye sende forthe for the same, and that suche of the membres as lye mooste convenyently for their purpose, maye have they rates proportioned to be set foorth by sea for the ayde of suche of their confederates as shall have moost neade of the same.

Thirdely, His Majeste thanketh moost hartely the Landsgrave, the Duc of Sax, and all the rest of their confederates, for the goode opinion, which they have of the greate good will and zeale which in hart and dede His Majeste hath to the sincere union and conjunction of them all to guyders, and with His Majeste, in one perfaict godly and christen judgement and opinion in relligion; as also for that that they ar contentyd to folowe thadvise of His Majeste uppon such consultations and conferences as their learnyd men and his shall have to guyder in His Majestes presens, folowing the holy scripture or the determination of the primative church or generall conciles had before fyve or 600 yeares. For the which purpose His Majeste promiseth to take peyn to be present Him self, and trusteth, suche men being sent from them as be learnyd, and men of upright judgements, without affections, and of good conformite, to be the causer of syche a conjunction in religion in all Christendom, as shall tend to the glory of God, the weale and benefite of all Christendom, and the honour bothe of His Majeste and all such others as shalbe ministres in the same. For the which purpose His Majeste requireth them now, when they shall send Commissioners to conclude the league defensyve, to send also the names of ten or twelve lernyd men, to thintent His Majeste maye choose 4, 5, or six, out of the same; which His Majeste requireth to have sent hither according to the promisse already made, assoone as maye be convenyently, without thempeachment of the rest of the affayres of the league, to conferre and debate uppon suche pointes of religion as at this present stand in difference or controversy betwene His Majeste and them: so as being united and knyt toguyder in one strength and religion, it maye be called in dede a very Christen League and Confederacy.

Fourthely, His Majeste giveth his mooste harty thanks to the Duc of Sax for his benevolence towerdes Him, and the gentill offres and request of amytye made to His Majeste by the sayd Bruno on his behalf; and prayeth of continuance in the same, with promise that His Majeste will not fayle towerdes him in any thing that maye tend to the semblable.

MCCCCXVI. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to WOTTON.¹

M^R WOOTTON, after most harty commendacions. These shalbe to signifie unto you that the Kinges Majestie hath receyved your last letters toching Tallartes matter, with the other letters and wrytinges from my Lord of Westminster, and hath spoken to thAdmyrall earnestly in Tallartes behaulf, for his lief. You shall further understand, that thAdmyrall arryved at Grenewiche uppon Fryday the 20th of this present, and came the next day to London, where he taryed uppon Sonday all day, and Monday cam hither, Twysday receyved the othe of the Kinges Majestie in the same forme that the French King gave his to you there. What chere and entertenement he had, they, we thynk, will reaport there at theyr home cummyng. At theyr beyng here they sayd they never saw the lyke, both for plentifulnesse, magnificence, rychenes, and also the good ordre. ThAdmyrall was in hand to have had the day for the payment of the 2 myllions shortned: wherunto we could not agree, both in respect of the honour and also of the profit, which by keping of it so long shuld acrew to the Kinges Majestie, saying, that we had made a treaty, and that we wold not fayle to observe. Wherunto it was answered by thAdmyrall, that all other men, except his maister and his counsaill, judged that we wold never restore Bullen agayn; and the rather, for that they saw us fortifye at Bullenberg and the Blacknesse, wherof the one we ought not to fortifie, having bene begonne sythens the conclusion of the treaty; which we denyed clerly, and shewed reasons why we ought in all polycye and reason use all the meanes, wych we myght lawfully use for the keping of our own, until we wer payd, with many other reasons to and from: but in thend the thing was leeft as it was fownd, and nothing innovated. And then objected we to hym that we herd they went about to begynne fortifications (which they ought not) at Portet, and at thhil over against thOld Man at thentry of thaven; wheras in deede at the talkyng of those maters the Kinges Commissioners for the peax herd of non other fortification then at theyr fort at S^t Estiens (which they offred to leave, if we wold have leefte at Bullenberg), at Hardelow, at Estaples, and Mount Hewly. Wherunto they answered that there wer fortifications begone at Portet, and the sayd hill a 12 moneth ago, which they

myght perfait, for that by the treaty it was lawfull to perfait any fortification begonne. And we replyed that, forbycause they had begonne them, and lefft them uppon entention not to buyld any more there, as they themselves well knew, therfor they owght not to be taken as thinges begone to be fortifyed. In conclusion, the matter cam to the Kinges knowledge, and His Majestie spake with thAdmyral rowndely in it, saying, that He could not endure the sayd fortifications, and specially that uppon the hil at thentry of the haven, and that if they went about it, He wouold not suffre it. ThAdmyral sayd he had no commission to speke it; but bycause we fortun'd to talke of it, nor he knew not that his maister ment to buyld at any of the sayd two places, but that certain pioners to the nombre of two thousand wer appoynted to cum to the fortifying of Estaples; and so that matter ended well. He made gret sute for his galley, which His Majestie was pleased to have gyven to hym: mary, as toching the forsares, He could not of his honour rendre them, having before gyven them libertye. ThAdmyral demanded restitution of the galley &c, as beyng no just prise: wherunto my Lord Admyral could not accord, and warme wordes wer betwene them, but they ended frendly. They charged us also with buylding at Blacknesse; which we answered was, as you knowe, begonne before the conclusion of the peax. They offred us, on the behalf of the Scottes, theyr acceptation of the treaty; wherin was added these woordes, "absque tamen regni nostri et libertatum ejusdem prejudicio"; requyryng of us an instrument testifying the receipt of the same, which was made in the name of the Counsaile, with this clause, "quatenus virtute tractatus recipere teneremur, et non aliter, nec alio modo": which they lyked furst: and when we had shewed it to the Kinges Majestie, and His Majestie also liked it, then they wouold have altered it, and had it made in His Majesties name. But we answered it was not reason that His Majestie shuld knoweledge the receipt of it, when no man had commission to delyver, as no man had there commission in dede. They offred certain demandes on the behalf of the Scottes set furth in articles, and wouold have had the Scottes enjoye the benefit of every article of the treaty with France. Wherunto we could not accord, for that they could prove no one demaund in tharticles reasonable. And whiles these matters wer in disputing upon the day of theyr departing, the King sent for hym to dyner, and after dyner they tooke theyr leave; and so the matter remayned, as we fownd it.

Yow shall further understand that our Commissioners for the ryvers hed, hath met with theyrs (which ar my Lord Gray (but he met not, bycause Mons^r du Bies cam not) M^r Moyle, Sir Edward your brother, and Sir Thomas Palmer.)

Palmer.) The French Commissioners wold have turned them to the spryng of Lyene, where you know that Puke mocked me, Sir William Paget, the sayd Commissioners pretending ignorance of the agrement, which you knew was made at our beyng togidres; beyng present my Lord Admyral, your self, I, Sir William Paget, Sir Frauncys Bernard, the President, Bochetel, Bardyn, Monluck, and others; which was, that they styckying to have had the brawnch cummyng from Kekes to be the hed, and we, that which cummyth from Vielmontier, bycause both Commissioners which wer sent from both partes for that purpose could not reaport which was the biggest, it was agreed that a new commission shuld be made on both sides for both the sayd branches to be viewed and measured, with a lyne from theyr heddes to the place where they mete togedres, and that the lengest shuld be taken for the ryvers hed. The French Admyral beyng spoken unto herin semed to know nothing, but the President denied it not. Of this we thought good to put you in remembrance; and the rather, bycause the Frenchmen kepe still in theyr handes by force Brunemberg, a place out of all question apperteynyng to the Kinges Majestie. For, wheder soever braunche be judged the hed of the ryver, they have no colour to kepe that place from us, beyng situat clerly on thisside all the brawnches, except that of Lyene, which is nothing. ThAdmyral hath promised that that matter shuld be dispeched now by the Commissioners for that purpose.

M^r Peter and the Deane of Paules¹ be on the other side the see, and have bene these 10 dayes, attending the French Commissioners to treatte uppon the question of the 500000 crownes &c, but as yet the French Commissioners be not cum. For the better instructing of the Commissioners for the ryvers hed, and the sending the others for the 500000 crownes &c, you shall do well to speke to the French King or his Counsail, and also signifie unto the same, not only how that sythens the departure hens of thAdmyral, the Kinges Majestie is certainly enformed that there be workmen in hand to fortifie at Portet, a place where no fortification was begonne before the conclusion of the peax (trew it is, that a trenche was cast along to Portet, when his army lay there, for theyr defence, but for non other entent, as themselves knowe, and is playn to all mens eyes) but also as shall appere unto you by the copy of letters from Cales, le Sire de Owtinges hath entred in forcible sort uppon His Majesties grownd in the marches of Cales, and from thens, accompanied with forty or fifty of the garrison of Ardre, armed and bering gonnes and pykes, have fetcht away certain hay belonging to the capitain of Balingham bulwerk, which is the Kinges Majesties, and so is the grownd where the hay grew, and hath bene in S^t Chevales tyme¹ peacebly permitted unto us, until now at this cummyng of Blenyencourt theyr new capitain. You shall say to the French King on the Kinges Majesties behalf, that, lykeas they have begonne and renewed theyr amitye to bothe theyr contentations, and to the quiet and tranquillite of both theyr Realmes, and theruppon by treaty, convenaunt, honour, and othe bownde theym selves to the contynuance of the same, and the performance of all thinges in theyr treaty, which on eyther partye ought to be performed; so His Majestie, beyng for his parte thorowly determined to do nothing that may touche his honour, or that shalbe contrary to his promesse, prayeth Hym his good brother (as He trustithe He wyll) to shewe the semblable on his behalf, and so to direct his ministres uppon the frontieres, as al though they fynding in the warre to the smart of the poore subgettes sum swetes, care not to put pykes and to gyve enformations, such as myght engendre quereles and matters of contention, yet all thinges may passe in deede to the contentation and hartes ease of Them bothe, and the rest and quietnes of the poore people whose blode shall be freshe in the sight of God, to the confusion of those that begynne or work the contrary. Pray Hym to gyve ordre that the hay be restored agayn and that his workemen may cease theyr fortifying at Portet, wherby He shall both do agreable to the treaty, and also gyve to his good brother the Kinges Majestie an encrease of love and frendship towards Hym.

MCCCCXVII. KING HENRY VIII. to WOTTON.²

M^R WOOTTON. After most harty commendations, these shalbe to signific unto you that, sythens the depeche of our last letters, the Kinges Majestie seyng the workes now newly begonne by the Frenchmen at Portest to go forward,

forward, notwithstanding that thAdmyrall told His Majestie the pioners, which wer cum down in to those partes wer only for the fortifications at Estaples, and considering also that toching the setting out of the ryvers hed the French Commissioners procede in another sort then was looked for; hath thought good by these to requyre you to make accesse to the French King, and, after due commendations from His Majestie, to set furth the love and frendship, which His Majestie hath borne towardses Hym of long tyme, and how, for that respect specially and the renovation therof, He was more desyrous of the concorde and peax then for any other cause, which, for His Majesties part, cannot quayle, onles the occasion procede on theyr behaulf there; and that as, for the more surer knot of this amitie, there is a treaty made betwene Theyr Majesties, so His Highnes for his part will not fayle to observe and kepe the same with all synceritie and good meanyng, and prayeth his good brother to do the like; wherunto if He have not speciall regard, and with a tendre eye looke to the same, sum synistre meanes may peraventure be insynuated unto Hym to thempayment therof. For now of late, you shall say, that there be woorkemen set to fortifie at a place called Portest, wheras before no fortification was begone, and lykewise a fortification thretened upon the poynt of the hill at thentrey of Bullen haven, wheras in dede certain trenches wer ones cast by his men of warre and over throwen twise by ours¹, and after the last overthrowng not begonne by theyrs agayn. And this is trew, to be abydden by. The one case is out of all question; the other we say is not begonne, seying that after the undoyng and overthrowng of it by our men, it was not begonne agayn. His Majestie therfor prayeth Hym, in respect of theyr amitie and treaty, to forbear the fortifying of those two places, which by the treaty may not be fortified, bycause ther was no fortification begonne before the conclusion of the sayd treaty. If the French King shall reply that He may fortifie there, for the same wer begonne before: to that His Majestie sayth they wer not begonne; the one not at all, the other to non effect or purpose. For, if He will call that a begynnyng which was ones begonne, though afterward it wer overthrowen, then may we likewise fortifie any place within that precinct of Bullonoys which we have, if the same have at any tyme bene a fortresse, or have the visage of begynnyng. Wherfor His Majestie prayeth Hym to stay the sayd fortifications, without goyng more forward in the same; which if He shall refuse to do, yet must you presse Hym to stay them uppon reason and equite, until the same question may be considered, wheder He may fortifie then or no. If He say that He may fortifie, and We say nay, yet reason wold the matter in controversy stayd, until the right wer tried; for eles He must shew Hym self to will have that done, that He lykyth best. If He shall not agree to this reasonable appoyntement, then must you shew Hym in playn termes that, considering the pretence of violence which those fortifications menace to the Kinges Majestie if they goo forward, and that His Majestie considering the force of the French Kinges to be alwayes at his hand redy, that He may with the helpe of those fortifications sodenly attempt to take from His Majestie that which He ought not to have without such recompence as He hath bownd Hymself to make, and that also by the treaty He ought not to fortifie otherwise then aforsaid, and yet nevertheles will do what He list therin; His Majestie cannot otherwise think, but that He myndyth to breke with Hym, for the which He must provyde, and therfor may not endure the contynuaunce any lenger of the sayd fortification. Requyre Hym, if He tendre so moche His Majesties amyte, as He hath of late pretended, to absteyn now from doying of a thing, whiche may hynder or empeche the same, and can serve Hym to no purpose in cace He meane to observe his treaty, and not have from Us Bulloyn, but by suche meanes as is convented.

And, forasmuche as you knowe it to have bene expressely agreed and promised betwene the Kinges Commissioners and the Presydent and Bochetel, in the presence of Mess^{rs} Bernardo and others, that the lengist and gretist of the two brawches cummyng from Kekes and Villemontiers, the same to be tryed by a lyne, shuld be taken and reputed for the hed of the ryver, and that Commissioners shuld be appoynted to se and vieu the sayd meting; for the which purpose His Majestie hath appoynted his Commissioners (a copy of whose commyssion ye shall receyve herwith); His Majestie prayeth you to move the French King that his Commyssioners may procede to the same. And in cace the sayd agreement shalbe eyther denyed or sayd to be of non authorite, His Highnes pleasure is, in the one case, that with thassystence of Monsieur Bernardo, if He be cum to that Courte, you shall desyre that the President and the Secretory may be called before Hym, to thentent you may justifie the same in theyr presence; whom, ye may say His Majestie, and such as wer then his Commissioners, takyth to be men of that honour and good fayth, that they will not go back from that wherunto they ones agreed. And as toching the validitie of theyr promesse, you ar able to say that they, beyng Commissioners, and authorised to treate and conclude uppon the

the peax, with all the circumstances, do aswell bynd theyr maister with a convenaunt, which they make expressely, and passe, as a convenaunt by mowth, as if the same wer passed in writing, if no thing be passed afterward in wrytyng to the contrary. And these matters His Majestie prayeth you to set furth with all your wisdom and dexterite, to thentent, if it be possible, the same may take such effect as may be to His Majesties contentation, and the quietnes of both Realmes. And what answer you shall have herin, His Majestie prayeth you to signifie by an expresse messenger with diligence.

Signifying fynally to you, that His Majestie hath sent Sir Thomas Palmer, Capitayn of thOldman, to move thAdmyral for the stay of the sayd fortifications, until the matter may be herd and commyned uppon, wheder he may fortifie or not. And yet, leest eyther thAdmyral shall not well take so moch uppon hym, or not be shortly overtaken, or sum other delay happen at his hand, wherby the workes may gayne sum more advancement then His Majestie wold, before He knew resolutely wherto to styck in thys cace; His Majestie hath thought good to have you to speke immediatly therin with the French King as aforesayd: praying you also to advertise of other your occurrentes therin accordingly. And thus, fare you &c. At Oteland, the 3^{de} of September, 1546.

² Complaining of the delay of the French Commissioners.

King,

King, in the self same place where my Lord Admirall and other Your Majesties Ambassadors lately met with thAdmirall and other Ambassadors of the French King, at the making of the treatie of peax. And, after the sight of our commissions on bothe sides, with promise to delyver eche to others the copies of the same, we discended to the mater. "And forasmoche" (sayd they) "as you do clayme this penaltie as a debt, you must shew by what "groundes you clayme the same." We aunswered that in dede we claymed, on Your Highnes behalf, this money as a just debt, as it was in dede, but we denied the same to bee well termed of them, calling it a penaltie; for, we sayd, that Your Majestie, having layed out of your own treasure and good debtes all this somme to their only use, was neverthesse pleased of your princely liberalitie to have forborn the demawnd of the same, upon certen conditions; which conditions not being fulfilled, their master hath promised to pay this money, as appeareth by his letters sealed with his Great Seale, and signed with his own hand. And here they began to desire us to see those letters. We sayd we doubted not but that they wer well instructed of them, the same proceeding from themselves, and being their own facte. Neverthesse we offred to shew them a true copie of the same; and so did reade the copie of the said letters. And after somme consideration of the same, bycause it appered by the said letters that this debt of 500000 crownes &c shuld be payed by their maister and his successours, only upon this condition, "yf the "treatie of perpetuall peax wer not in all thinges thoroughly observed;" they asked, wherein that treatie had not byn observed of their partie. We aunswered, in sundry thinges, and first in this, that they had not payed the 100000 crownes yerely, according to the treatie of Moore; the true payment wherof was specially promised also on their behalf in the treatie of perpetuall peax. And having reasoned a good season the woordes of the perpetuall peax touching this poinct, they asked us whither we woold allege any other cause. We aunswered, yea, but woold first here their aunswer to this. They desired very moche to have hard all the groundes we had to inforce our clayme; "and then" (sayd they) "we will aunswer to all at ones." But, we alwayes saying that this shuld be a confuse maner of proceeding, and that the better and playner way was furst to discusse one article, and so one other; they semed in thende pleased therwith, and sayd that, forasmoche as the fundation of all our talke consisted upon those letters obligatorie of the French King, without the sight wherof they could not assent to any thing, they desired moche the sighte of the originall letters. And, notwithstanding that we alleged unto them, how unlike it was, that they shuld have no knowlege of their

their own writings; they sweare bothe very earnestly that there hath byn as moche searche made as may be, and no record nor copie of the same can be found; and eftsones prayed us to thinke that they used this request neither for any delay, nor for any other respect then to see, for their discharge, the said letters under suche auctentique forme as might be for their discharge, and that was only thoriginall letters, without the sight wherof they might neither aunswer nor agree to any thing. And here having had, upon occasion ministred of their partes, somme talke of this amitie betwene Your Majestic and the French King, wherein wer used gentle and very mylde woordes of bothe sides, they said that this restraint of all thinges was straunge, and made the poore peysauntes almost mistrust the begynning of a nue warre. We aunswered that we wer sory for it also, but the fault was in them, for they began first; and having begon, reason wold they shuld suffer the lyke agayn. And here, after some talke, who began, (they travelling asmoche as they might to make fainct excuses, that it began not of them) finally they prayed us to be meanes that these restraynctes, which be but maters of pykes and unkindnes, may be taken away of our parte, and they wold also earnestly travell for the lyke for their parte. And so, having many good woordes unto us, wherein we wer not moche in their debt, we finally departed, and have differred to mete agayn unto suche tyme as we shall know Your Majesties pleasure touching the sending of those originall letters; wherein it may like Your Majestic to commaund your most gracious pleasure to be signified unto us, and also to take thies our doinges in good and gracious parte. And we shall, according to our most bounden duties, pray to Almighty God for the preservation of your Highnes long to reign over us. From Callys, the 10th of September, 1546.¹

MCCCCXX. GREY to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASE yt Your mooste Excellent Majeste to be advertised, that I have this mornyng received intelligence that Cappitaine La Moyene, Cappitaine Nycholas, and Cappitaine Saint Marie, ar presentlye at Portet with their companyes in right good ordre, and have intrenshed the top of the hill, where they pretend to make a strong tower, and leave as yet the great worke, which they have begon, for more spede, so as nowe the saide hill, having certeyne maundes placed aboute the same, wilbe right shortlye in good defence. Wherefore having presently no meanes tavoyde them from that worke withoute ordonance, I mooste humblye desyre Your Highenes to considre that yt wilbe requysyte to have for that purpose many more men, than maye at anye tyme be spared from anye of these pieces ; which I referr to Your Highenes deliberet dyscretion.

Mooste humblye desyring Your Majeste to pardonne the shortnes of this my letter, having comytted certeyne thinges in credict to Sir Thomas Moyle¹ this bearer, for that I wolde not herein be tedyous to Your Highenes. And havinge sent to the Courte uppon our Ladye daye, to knowe where and when I shulde have audience, it chaunsed that the Frenche King, the night before, hadd lyne at Bourg in Bresse: and, having been there but oone night, uppon our Ladye daye abowte tenne of the clocke having herde masse, departed thence; and forbycause that that daye He was mynded to lodge in a village, I hadde aunswere that on Thursdaye night I shulde lodge myself as nighe the Courte as I cowde, and on Frydaye morning I sholde have audience.

According

According wherunto on Thursdaye night I came to a towne called Tournus on this syde the Sone; the Frenche King being that night at a lytle towne namydde Cuserye three or fowre Englishe myles beyonde the Sone, and ryding thither the next daye bytymes, I hadde audience of Hym as He was going to masse. And having declared theeffecte of myne instruccions to Hym, He sayde that as for the poynte (as He callid it) of thentrye of Boloyne haven, He entendid not to cause enye fortification to be made there, for He sayde that He confessid that, if He shulde soo doo, hit shulde be a newe fortification, and that it shulde be agaynst the treatye. But as for Portet, He sayde it was no newe fortification, for it was begoonne before the conclusion of the treatye, and therefore that they, that hadde otherwise enfourmidde Your Majestie, hadde wrongelye enfourmid You of it. How be it He sayde, He in deede had cause to complayne, for that Your Majestie didde fortifye uppon the hylle by Boloyne, the which was a fortification newe begoonne sith the conclusion of the peax. And as for the mater of the ryver, He sayde that his Commissioners therto deputed hadde sufficient auctoritye to procede in it; and his mynde was that they shulde procede according to the treatye, for therfore He hadde gyven theym that commission. And as for the mater of Mons^r Daultinges, He sayde He never herde of it before. How be it He sayde He sholde have grounde and medowes abowte that syde of Arde, that shulde be within his pale. And in case the heye and grounde were within his pale, or that He were in possession of it, then we hadde no cause to complayne of it; and in case it were not, He wolde cause the mater soo to be ordered, as Your Majestie shulde have cause to be contentid with it; and sayde, that He wolde speake to his Chauncelour to take such ordre in it, as sholde be expedient for it.

Wherunto I sayde that I was enfourmidde that there was no forte begoonne to be buyldid at Portet before the conclusion of the treatye, and whether there were enye trenche begoonne therabout, at what tyme certayne of his menne laye there the laste yere for theyr defence, I cowde not well telle, but if there were enye such thing doon, it was never doon to thintent to make enye forte there (the which are made to contynue), but onelye to serve for the while that his menne shulde lye encampid there, and after theyr departure never entendid to be occupyed to serve for enye fortification more. And as for the fortification made by Your Majestie uppon the hille by Boloyne, I sayde that it shulde be founde that it was begoonne before the conclusion of the treatye; and that I knewe that Your Majestie hadde given commaundement that it shulde be doon, and that while I laye at Guisnes

the treatye of the peax, I knewe that my Lord Admyrall and M^r Secretarye Paget were certified that it was begoon, and that, before the conclusion of the said treatye. And as for the matyer of the ryver, for bycause that He made mencion onelye of the treatye, doubtinge whether He hadde taken my wordes well, I sayed that thagreement that I spake of was not expressed in the treatye; but, for bycause that for lacke of tyme we cowde not then cause that matyer to be thoroughlye tryed before the conclusion of the treatye, therfore it was agreed that it shulde be doon afterwarde at better leysure; and that this being a thinge agreed upon, was of asmoche strenght as the wordes of the treatye. As for the matyer of Arde, I sayde I wolde then speake with Mons^r le Chauncelier in it, and declare the matyer playnelye unto hym.

The King aunswered me that, as for Portet, I was not well enfourmidde; for not onelye the laste yere, but even this yere, and before the conclusion of the peax, He had caused, not a trenche as I called it, but a verye begynning of a forte to be made there, and that this shulde be founde and tryed to be true. And as for our fortification uppon the hille by Boloynes, He sayed that undoubtedlye there was none begoonne before the conclusion of the treatye, whatsoever my Lord Admyrall or M^r Pagett hadde been boren in hande, and soo wolde it be founde. And as for his parte He sayed He was contented that the matyer sholde be tryed, and that whatsoever shulde be founde that He hadde begoonne sith the conclusion of the treatye, He was contented it shulde be beaten downe; soo Your Majestie were contented wyth the like for your parte. And He sayed that suche matiers muste procede indifferentlye for bothe partyes; for if Your Majestie wolde begynne newe fortifications, You ought to fynde no fawte with Hym, though He were mynded to attempte to doo the like. How be it He sayed that this aunswere He made me sodaynlye for the tyme; but, forbycause that Mons^r lAdmyrall wolde be here within three or fowre dayes, who (He sayd) hadd spoken with Your Majestie of these matiers alredye, He referred the fynall aunswer herof unto hym, to whome I shulde resorte for it. And as for the matyer of the ryver; whatsoever was agreed uppon betwixte us, He sayed He wolde cause it to be kepte; but, for bycause that thAdmyrall and other that were at it, were not now at the Courte, to shewe Hym what was agreed uppon, I shulde also, for an aunswere therof, repayre to the said Admyrall at his returne to the Courte. And then He sayed that He wolde not fayle to doo all thinges conteyned in the treatye, according to his promys, and desyred nothing more, then the contynuaunce of the ametye betwixte Your Majesties;

and therefore entended not to give light credence to enye minister that might seeme to goo abowte to hyndre or lett it, and soo willed me to assure Your Majestie.

And thus, seing that the King gave soo good an aunswere as touching the hylle at thentrye of the haven, the which I take to be the thinge of mooste importaunce, and that for Portet and for the ryver He remyttidde me for a fynall aunswere to thAdmyrall, who, as seemeth to me by the letters of my Lordes of Your Majesties mooste honorable Counsaill, hath made promyse alredeye that at Portet no fortification shalbe made, and for the ryver the Commissioners shall procede as it was agreed; I thought it beste not to contende enye further with the King in it, but to tarye the Admyralles comminge, whose mynde, it seemith, the King is content to follow heerein. And yet, neverthelesse, I thought it expedient to certyfye Your Majestie, the meane season, of this aunswere made me by the King.

Before I entred to the King, I spake with the Chauncelour and the Generall, to knowe whether they hadde sent theyr Commissioners, that shulde discusse the eleventh article of the treatye concerning the fyve hundreth thowsande crownes; and they answered me that the daye appointed for the meeting of theym was the seventh of this moneth, and that theyr Commissioners were depeched hens tyme yn nough, soo that they were there the 6th of this moneth. And thus having no more worthe advertisement at this tyme, I besече Jesus longe to preserve Your Grace in health, and all felycyte. Written at Tournus uppon Sone, the 11th daye of September, 1546.

MCCCCXXII. CARNE to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

PLEASYTH yt your mooste honorable Lordships. The 10th of this I recevide your Lordships letter of the laste of August, according to the purporte wherof I deliveryd the article of the comprehension of the Scotese, in the same forme as hit was sent me, to the President Schore, who shewide me that the Scotese doo ley for them that thEmperor ys not comprehended in the peax betwixt the Kinges Majestie and them, wherof he merveyled, seing the Kinges Majestie (as he said) ought to have comprehended them; never the lesse the Scotese doo to treate by themselves with them here, of a peax, but (he said) that they had send to thEmperors Ambassadour resident there to move the Kinges Majestie therin. In so moch (he said) that wher tharticle is, that the Kinges Majestie may not warre against the Scotese, nisi nova occasione data, His Majestie hath a new occasion, by that the Scotese doo kepe warre against thEmperor. Farther he said that the Governor of the Scotese doth beseige the Castell of Sainct Androse in Scotlonde, for to take those that slew the Cardinall ther, for to do justice upon them, who doo kepe them within that holt.

As toching thEmperour, he tolde me that the Ladye Regent lokyth for no newse from Hym or from Germany, till the battell be past; for he sayth thEmperor woll surly fight, yf thother woll abyde hit, and taryth but for the arryvall to Hym of the Countie de Buire, who hath no lett to comme. For wher thEmperor, at his first incamping, incampt Hymself in thother syde of Danubium, thinking that the Landsgrave wold folow, who incampt hym of this syde the said Danubium, and perceving that the Landsgrave dyd not move therhens, thEmperor movyd his campe and came of this syd lyke wyse. When the Landsgrave percevid thEmperor to have brought his campe of this syd, he removyd with his armye over the Danubium, and ther doth kepe his campe yet; so that now, as the President shewid me, ther is no lett for the Countie de Buire to come to thEmperour, being of this syd the ryver. Other occurrantes here be none.

As toching M^r Dymockes restitution, the Counsaill here hath his testimonials to peruse, and therupon to make reporte to the Ladie Regent, which shalbe, as I am promysed, as spedely as they may. M^r Damesell hath sent to me to gete a pasporte for to cary over to the Kinges Majestie nyne thowsen kyntalls of copre. I have spokyn for hit, but yet I have no aunser. And having no other, doo beseche Almighty God to conserve youre Lordships in long and prosperous helth. From Bruxells, the 11th of Septembre.

MCCCCXXIII. CARNE to PAGET.

PLEASYTHE yt your Maistership. The 14th of this arryvede here a poste from thEmperour wherby ys advertysede that thEmperour dyd incampe Hym by the towne of Englestate, so nighe to the Landsgraves campe, that the firste daye the Landsgrave with his artilerye of his campe dyde beate so sore all that daye, from mornynge to night, into thEmperours campe, that no man coulde well be assurede there within, and slewe abowt a hundryth of thEmperors folke. That night thEmperialles fortifyede theyr campe, and made mowntaynes therwithin, that the next daye they beyte into the Landsgraves campe with theyr artilerye, and slewe manye, and soo contynewede shotinge from oone campe to another daye by daye, that the Landsgrave at the laste retyrede with hys campe therhens, whether, or to what place, camme noo worde by that poste, for he was disspatchede incontynent upon thapparance of the seyde retyrynge. This mornynge arryvede another poste from thEmperor with letters of the 8th of thys, that the seyde Landsgrave doth retyre towardes the stronge townes, namynge noone that I can lerne. And thEmperor is determynede not to folowe hym, tyll tharyvall of Mons' du Buyre to Hym, to have all hys force to gether firste, which was lookyd for to be with thEmperor the 14th of this without faile, which ys lykelye, for there arryvede here a poste yesterdaie from the seyde Countye du Buyre, whom he lefft the 5th of thys within a lytle of Noremberge, and hadd no resistance all the wey that I coulde hyre of, without lacke of victualles; by such letters as somme of thEmperors campe wrote hyther. The Landsgraves armye shulde be abowte 45 thowsen, better fornyshede of horsemen of the cowntre then of foetmen. The sayinge ys here nowe, that thEmperor ys not lookyd for here tyll thiese matiers bee pacyfyed.

The 9th of thys here arryvede a poste from Rome, but what hee brought I can not yet lerne. All the capytaynes of the bandes of the frountyers of Artoys and Flaunders bee here and sende for hyther. Somme saye hyt ys forbicause the Frenchmen bee in armes abowt Masiers, nighe the borders of Luxomburgh and Liege, for bicause of a newe fortresse the Lady Regent hathe made in the frountiers of Liege and Fraunce, where the Frenchmen were wont alwayes to passe to thys countries withowt daunger, which ys namede Maryeburghe, and nowe gardable, well provydede with artillary and munition. Other occurrantes I hyre none. Besechinge you to take thys in good parte.

And thus I praye Almightye God to conserve your Mastership in longe and prossperous lyeff. From Bruxelles, the 16th of September, 1546.

MCCCCXXIV. WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

HIT maye please Your Majestie to be advertisid, that thAdmyrall, of whome I shulde have hadd aunswere as concerning the fortifyeng at Portet and the hedde of the ryver, is not yet comme to the Courte; nor is lookid for before thies fowre or fyve dayes; whatsoever the cause be of his longe comminge. But the meane season, the 16th of this present, the King then being at Chalons uppon Sone in Burgondye, camme to me the Generall Bayard and the Secretarye Laube Espine, sent from the King theyr maister as they sayde, to shewe me that he hadde receyvid that daye letters from his Ambassadour by Your Majestie, by the whiche he was certified that Your Majestie requyred that his workemen at Portet shulde cease and forbear enye further working there, till it were tryed, whether that fortificacion hadde been begonne before the date of the treatye or not. Whereuppon the King, desyering to doo all thinges that might tende to thentretaynement of the peax and amitye with Your Majestie, was contented so to doo; and therfore had alredye sent worde to hys ministres in those partyes, that they shulde cawse the sayde workemen to procede no further in that they hadde begonne, till the mater wer tryed, and that he doubtid not but that Your Majestie wolde be content to doo the lyke in the fortificacions by your menne begonne: the which the King theyr maister pretendeth also to have been begonne sith the date of the treatye; and so requyred me to advertise Your Majestie.

Now, forbycause that by theyr tale it seemid that the King lookid and meanted that you shulde cawse your workemenne to cease to, wherin I knowe not well what your pleasure is, I made theym none other aunswer, but that I wolde not fayle to advertise Your Majestie of it.

And then I shewid theym that the last tyme that I was with the King,
I tolde

I tolde Hym that his Commissioners for the ryver that makith the lymytes, hadd not sufficient instructions to procede in it, according to the agrement made in that behalf, or at least wolde not be aknowne of it; and therfore I askid of theym, whether they had enye charge to speake enye thinge therof. They sayde they hadd none; but they sayde that thAdmyrall, and the President Remon, and Bouchetell, hadde advertisid theyr Commissioners of that that was agreid uppon in that behalf. They tolde me also that theyr maisters Commissioners for the fyve hundreth thowsande crownes, were mette with Your Majesties Commissioners at the daye appointid. And thus having no more worthye advertisement at this tyme, I beseche Jesus preserve Your Majestie in helth and all felycyte. Written at Chaignye, the 17th of September, 1546.

MCCCCXXV. WOTTON to PAGET.

SIR, my duetye remembred. Tallard is beheddid uppon Frydaye the thirde of this moneth. Menye menne complayne that theyr processe hange to longe in the lawe: peraventure he hadde no suche cause to complayne. Madame de Bellay takith the mater verye heaveleye, and withdrawith herself owte of the Cowrte, to lamente her yll chaunce. How be it, I suppose she will not absent herself passed three or fowre monethes.

The 16th of this moneth the Generall Bayard and the Secretarye Laube Espyne shewid me that the King had receyvid letters from Regensburgh, and other fressher from Strazeburgh, conteyning that the first of this moneth, thEmperour havinge fortyfyed his campe abowte Engolstadt, the Protestantes encampid themselves as nighe unto Hym as they well might; and desyering to drawe Hym owte of his forte to fighte, sette theymselves in ordre of batayle, and sent of theyr menne to skyrmyshe. Wherwyth thEmperour cawsid all his armye lykewise to goo fourthe, and stande in araye and ordre of batayle; but marchid not forwarde, and sent lykewise of his menne to the skyrmyshe, the which encreasid of nombre of menne of bothe sides, till it beganne to

waxe verye hotte. But fynallye thEmperour, perceyving verye well what the Protestantes meanid, cawsid all his armye to retyre into his forte. At the which skyrmishe hath been manye slayne on bothe sides, not onelye in the skyrmishe, but by thartillarye shotte owte on bothe sides. The nexte daye the Protestantes provokid thEmperours armye to comme fourth agayne, as they didde the daye before; but thEmperour kepte his menne within his forte, so that lytle hurte was doonne that daye. The Protestantes, perceyving that they cowde not by this meanes drawe thEmperour owte to fighte, devysid this waye. Mons^r de Bure marchith towards thEmperour thourough the countrey of Franklandt¹, whome folowe Ryfenbergh, the Conte Pyklyne, and other, with 25 thowsande footemen and 15 hundreth horsemen. The Landgrave therfore with the greate armye of the Protestantes returne backe to passe the Danowe agayne, and goo streight to sette uppon the Conte of Bure, who havinge oone armye at his heeles, and an other to meete hym in his face, muste nedes be overthrowne, if they come to the batayle, considering the greate nombre that the Protestantes ar. And to save the Conte de Bure there is but oone waye, that is, if thEmperour, perceyving what the Protestantes entende, comme fourthe of his forte, and folowe the Protestantes to succour Mons^r de Bure. And in cace He soo doo, then will the Protestantes turne backe agayne and sette uppon thEmperour, being oones owte of his forte, which He cannot from place to place carye with Hym. And thus the Protestantes reken assuredlye, that either Mons^r de Bures campe is loste and caste awaye, or elles the Emperour shalbe forcidde to tempte the fortune of the batayle Hymself, which the Protestantes moch desyre, thinking themselves to stronge for Hym. And surelye they reken heere, and to all reason it seemith so, that Mons^r de Bure and his campe goith even streighte to the boucherye. They saye also that when the Counte de Bure was passid the Ryne, the Protestantes, that were appointid to lette his passage, retyerid to a certayne forte not farre from Francforde, and had brought thither to theym thartillerye of Francforde; and that Mons^r de Bure wolde needes sette uppon theym in theyr forte, where he loste of his menne, and speciallye his Lieutenaunt Mons^r de Barbanson, and certayne of his menne were there taken, and emonge theym the Marquyse of Barrow: and perceyving at the laste, what a foolishe entrepryse he went abowte, with the sayd losse withdrewe his armye and marchid forwarde. Yf it be true that Barbanson be deade, I am well assured that Mons^r de Bure is marvelouslye troublid and discomfortid with it; for Barbanson was his right hande, and surelye a gentleman worthye anye greate prayse. And, as it was communelye spoken, Mons^r de Bure entendid to have maryed his onelye daughter and heyre to hym.

The 15th of this moneth was with me a gentleman of this Courte, namid La Plance, whome you and I knewe firste in the Duke of Cleves Courte. The sayde La Plance desyerid me that, when I shulde write nexte unto you, I woldo doo semuche for hym as to requyre you to remembre that he broughte a letter to you to Calais from the Queene of Navarre, and also what comunicacion he hadde with you besides. And it seemith that he wolde fayne have summe aunswere from you, of it. Whatsoever the mater be, I perceyve he cowde be content to here from you either by letter or otherwise. He folowith Mons^r de Longuevall, and bearith me in hande that all that syde, which is the syde des Dames, ar muche desyerouse of the contynuaunce of this amytie betwixte us and theym; and that besydes that, Mons^r de Longueval is muche your freende. And thus Jesus preserve you longe in health and prosperite. Written at Chaignye, the 17th of September, 1546.

Yours ever to commaunde,

To the right honorable, Sir William Paget, Knight,
oon of the Kinges Majestes two Principall Secretaryes.

MCCCCXXVI. WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

Hir maye please Your Majestie to be advertisid, that Sondaye the 19th of this present, Mons^r lAdmyrall arryvid at this Courte, the King lyeng at a village namid Argilly within three greate leages of Beaulne, where He delyteth so muche, for bycause of the forest, that although He have been there alredye fowre or fyve dayes, hunting everye daye, yet it is thought that He will not departe thens these three or fowre dayes. The meane season thAmbassadors lye heere at Beaulne. The nexte daye I sent a servaunt of myne to the Courte with a letter to the said Admyrall, requyring to knowe when I shulde resorte unto hym for thaunsweres that the Frenche King hadd appointid me to have of hym; but he was gone alredye a hunting with the King, and so my servaunt broughte my letter to me agayne. But, the meane season, whyle my servaunt was there, camme to me ung Chevancheur dEsquierye dEsquiere of the Kinges, sent to me by thAdmyrall, to desyre me to be the nexte daye at the Courte by eight of the clocke in the moreninge. And, how be it that this towne is three howres ryding from the Courte, and that the gates heere open not verye earelye, yet was I there at the howre appointid, or before. And having taryed a good while first at the Generall Bayarts chambre, and after at thAdmyralles chambre, at the laste thAdmyrall camme to me, the King being even then gone a lassemblee, for so they calle the place where they meete when they goo a huntinge, and where they dyne. Mons^r lAdmyrall embracid me verye gentelye, and askid me howe I lykid this cuntrey; and having made aunswere thereunto, I askid hym of Your Majestie, and howe gladde he was that he was oones gotten home agayne. He aunswerid me of Your Majestye verye honorablye, and sette fourthe the honour doon unto hym and the greate cheere made hym, in verye good wordes. Howe be it, he made no longe tale therof; by lykelyhode, for bycause he made haste to folowe the King; but streight beganne to saye unto me that he thought I had herde that Your Majesties menne hadde overthrowen a thinge begonne by the King his maisters menne, by Boloynes, and that neverthelesse the King his maister, perceyving that Your Majestie was contentid that the matier shulde be examynyed, whether it were a newe forte or not, had sent commaundement to his officers in those partyes that they shulde worke no more there, tyll the mater were freendelye examynid and tryed. Whereunto I sayed that as for the first parte, of the overthrowinge of that they hadde begoonne, I knewe nothing; but that as for the forbearing to procede enye further in the said worke begoonne, I sayed that the Generall Bayard and the Secretarye de Laube Espine had shewid me that the King had so commaundid in dede. ThAdmyrall sayed that at his being in Englande Your Majestie hadde spoken to hym as concerning the fortyfyeng, that was threatenid to be made at the poynte of thentree of the haven, but not of Portet; but, after he was departid from Your Majestie, You sent hym worde of it, and he promysid to doo what he might for the stayeng of it. Whereuppon he wrote to the King his maister, Who at the laste was contentid at his requeste to staye it, as he sayed before. And sayed also, that the King his maister was certaynelye enfourmid that Your Majestie cawsid soldiours to be assembled in England, the which He cowde not perceyve to be doon for enye other purpose but onelye to sette uppon Hym: and that therefore He hadde sent like commaundement to the Mareshall du Bies, that he shulde gather menne of warre lykewise for his defence; but that the said Admyrall, nowe at his comminge home, lyking not these fasshions, hadde

communed with the King his maister therof, declaring unto Hym that by the communicacion that Your Majestie hadde with hym, he perceyvid verye well what good affection Yowe beare to his maister, and to thentreteynement of this peax and amitye, and thAdmyrall sayed that he trustid somuch theruppon that he tooke uppon hym to assure the King his maister that, as soone as Your Majestie shulde be enfourmid that He hadde commaundid that his workemen shulde cease at Portet, and that He was contentid that the mater shulde be examynid and herde freendelye, Your Majestie wolde streightefourth countremaunde all such soldiours as You hadde causid to be assemblid: and that by this meanes he hadde inducid the King his maister lykewise to sende to the Mareshall du Bies, that he shulde forbear to gather enye menne of warre for his parte. And then he askid me, what I thought, whether Your Majestie wolde not dismissee such soldeours as You hadde causid to be assemblid, heering that his maister was content to cease the fortifyeng at Portet and to have the mater amyablye examynid. Whereunto I sayed that I was verye gladde that he hadde so well perceyvid and marked the good affection, that Your Majestie bearith to the King his maister, the which I sayed was the thinge that chieflie inducid Your Majestie to renewe this peax and amitye with Hym, the which shulde never be broken agayne by Your Majestie, unlesse thoccasion and fawte procede of theyr parte; and that therfore, althoughe I hadde herde nothinge of enye assemblee of souldiours that shulde be made in England, yet, if enye were made, so as he sayed, I thought assuridlye that the cawse therof ones taken awaye, so as it mighte appere to Your Majestie that they intendid to observe the treatye in deede for theyr parte, Your Majestie wolde dismissee them agayne.

ThAdmyrall sayed unto me that, as for Yourself, he knewe very well the good inclynacion that Your Majestie is of towardses the conservacion of this amitye; marye, he sayed, that there were summe of your Counsaillours that were not of that mynde, but that wolde rather be gladde that summe mater of pyke might ryse betwixte Your Majestie and his maister, and that althoughe the thinge that was doon by Your Majesties menne at Portet mighte well have been forborne, yet he wolde neither in that nor enye thinge elles make the worste of it to his maister. And soo, he sayed, that all good servauntes and ministres ought to doo, in thinges that tende not to the dishonour nor greate prejudice of theyr maister. Wherunto (for bycause that in my symple mynde it is not mucche amisse, for diverse consideracions, that they have that opynyon that there be of Your Majestes Counsaillours, that force not mucche for the contynuaunce of this peax, so as they have styлле that good opynyon of Your Majestes good inclynation towards it) I sayed, that in deede where manye Counsaillers were, it was seldome scene that they drewe all by oone lync, for they were not all oone mothers children. Yet they, knowing as they didde the good affection that Your Majestie beareth to it, shulde doo no hurte in this mater. I sayed also that, lykeas there were suche abowte Your Majeste, so it seemid to me that there were summe abowte the King his maister, seing that certayne thinges hadde been attemptid of late on theyr parte, that mighte be occasion of greater inconvenyences, unlesse summe remedye were wiselye provydid for it. He sayed that, if he hadde been present, he wolde have hadde a better eye unto such thinges, and that that hadde cawsed hym to make the more haste in his journey backwarde; for he camme in fowre dayes from Parys hither, leaving all his trayne behynde; and sayed, that he wolde not fayle to doo all that laye in hym for the conservacion of this peax and amitye; and sayed, that he trustid well, that I wolde doo the lyke for my parte: and for all Your Majestes affayres willed me to resorte boldelye unto hym at all tymes, and that I shulde fynde hym readye to doo what leye in his power to doo; desyering me also to advertise Your Majestie of all this, that he hadde talkyd of with me.

And thus, alledging that the King was gonne alredye before, and that he muste followe, wolde have departid; but I stayed hym a litle, sayeng that, at the laste tyme, I spake with the King his maister, He remittid me for aunswere of two thinges unto hym. The first was, for the forbearing of the fortyfyng at Portet, the which was a newe fortificacion, and agaynst the treatye. The seconde was, for the Commissioners by them appointid to trye owte the sprynge and hedde of the ryver of Pont de Bryke; who wolde not procede in that mater, as it was agreid that they shulde doo. ThAdmyrall sayed that as for the firste parte was aunswerid alredye, for his maister hadde commaundid that they shulde cease to worke enye more at Portet, and that it shulde be amyablye tryed, whether the Frenche King might fortyfye there or not. How be it, he sayed, he tooke it that he might doo it, for bycause that he thought it was begonne before the date of the treatye. But then he addid oone worde more to it, the which me thought was a secrete warninge, what of our parte shulde be answered thereunto; for he sayed that in deede they hadde not begoonne nowe theyr worke in that self place, where it was begoone before; wherin they hadde committid errour, he sayed. As for the ryver, he sayed that theyr Commissioners shulde procede according to the treatye. Whereunto I sayed that the treatye dooth not specyfye whiche is the hedde, but that it was agreid, besides that that is written in the treatye, that, forbycause either Kekes

or Vielmonstier muste needes be the hedde, that those two braunches shulde be measurid, and that the longest of them bothe shulde be taken for the hedde. He sayed he was not present at enye such agreement. I tolde hym that the President and Bouchetill were. "Youe knowe," quod thAdmyrall, "that manye thinges are spoken of in divysing and communinge of treatyes; but that onelye byndith, that is written." "Hit is true," quod I, "when they ar spoken of onelye by waye of communication; but when they are by bothe partyes agreed uppon as parte of the treatye, then doo they bynde asmoche as the treatyc, whether they be written or unwritten." "Well," quod thAdmyrall, "the President wilbe heere within thies three or fowre dayes, and then you shall have an aunswere therin." "The Commissioners," quod I, "have been longe abowte this mater and nothing is doone." "They maye," quod he, "procede according to the treatye." "The King my maisters Commissioners," quod I, "have chardge to procede according unto that that was agreed uppon and no otherwise; and the treatye speakith but generallye of it, not specifieng what shulde be taken for the springe. And in cace that I were oone of the Kinges my maisters Commissioners for that purpose, and muste procede according unto the written treatye onelye, then wolde I demaunde for the hedde not onelye Kekkes or Vielmonstier, but Kekkes and Vielmonstier, yea, and as manye other springes and braunches, as joyne together to make that ryver." "Naye," quod thAdmyrall, "you shulde doo wronge so, for the ryver can have but oone hedde." "I thinke," quod I, "that by right and conscience I might so doo, for, thoughe menne have but oone hedde, yet I take it that ryvers maye have more springes." "Well," quod thAdmyrall, "when the President commyth, we will see what shalbe doone in this mater;" and so departid, and went to his horse. Hit seemyth that this gathering of menne in England hath made them afrayde, and that they wolde be verye lothe to be in warre agayne with Your Majeste. The Courte is fulle heere that there hath been a greате byckering betwixte your menne and theyrs abowte Boloyn, and that abowte two hundreth of theyr parte are slayne; but thAdmyrall spake never a worde to me therof, so that I take it not to be true.

Misser Francesco Bernardo camme thither uppon Mondaye laste late in the evenyng, and was then with me. The morowe after, I, comminge from the Courte, mette hym ryding thither; and this daye morening he camme to me, sayeng that the daye before thAdmyrall hadde had moch comunicacion with hym, wondering mucche, what it shulde meane that Your Majeste shulde gather menne in England; and askid hym, whether he thought that Your Majestie wolde breake with his maister. Misser Francesco sayeth that he aunswerid that he thought that it was for fortifyeng at Portet, and that made you doubte, whether they entended to kepe the treatye. "Yf that be the mater," quod thAdmyrall, "it shalbe well ynough remedyed, for the King hath commaundid that the woorkemen shall cease there." And by Misser Francescos tale it seemith that thAdmyrall meanith that they shall so cease, as they shall not begynne agayne. And thAdmyrall sware greate othes unto hym that, at his beyng in England, he knewe not that enye such fortificacion was meanid to be made there, but that while he was in his journey thitherwarde, Mons^r du Bies wrote to the King that, if He wolde make a fortresse at Portet, it were a verye necessary thinge, and that it might lawfullyc be doone, for bycause it was begonne before the treatye; and that the Frenche King aunswerid hym, that he shulde doo in it, as he thought meetiste. And so was it begonne, unknowne to the said Admyrall.

Forbycause that concerning the mater of the haye fette awaye by force of theym of Arde, the Frenche King shewid me that the Chauncellour shulde take such an ordre therin as shulde be to your contentation, I spake fyrst with the said Chauncelour in it, who requyrid a memoryall in writyng to be deliverid hym of it; the which I cawsid to be made and sent it hym; at what tyme he sayed that he wolde sende me worde, what ordre he wolde take in it. But hering nothing from hym, the laste tyme I was at the Courte, fynding hym not there, and he being lodgid a leage thens, I sent to hym to knowe what was doone in it. "Why," quod the Chauncelour to my servaunt, "hath it not been declarid to hym to daye?" "Yf it hadde," quod my servaunt, "there is no cause whye he shulde have sent me hither for it nowe." The Chauncelour sayed that the Generall Bayard shulde have declarid it unto me. And then he willed my servaunt to comme to hym agayne this morninge for the mater: as my servaunt didde. And then he sayed unto hym that he shulde doo his recommendacions unto me, and that I shulde take no thought, nor sende no more for the mater, for he wolde sende hyther to me, to my lodginge, to certifye me, what was doone in it. And this is all that I canne knowe therof as yet.

Mons^r de Morette (uppon whome all good entreteynement is well bestowed, for the good reaporte that he makith of it) desyerid me hartelye to doo his humble recommendations unto Your Majeste, who emonge other thinges rejoysith verye moch to have seen my Lorde Prynces Grace; of whose prayses he can not speake yn noughe: whome, with Your Majestie
I beseche

I beseche Jesus longe to preserve in helth and all felycyte. Written at Beaulne, the 22th of September, 1546.

MCCCCXXVII. THE COUNCIL WITH THE KING to WOTTON.¹

M^R WOOTTON, after our most harty commendacions. These may be to signifie unto you that the Kinges Majestie hath receyved your letters by Fraunces the currouer, and now last by this berar, and takith all your doynges there in right thankfull part; signifying unto you that likeas the French King and his ministres there have proceded with you doulcely and amicably, so hathe his Ambassadour done here; and yesterday was here at the Court with confyrmation of all that his maister hath sayd there; adding in maner a complaint, but yet in frendly sort, how that my Lord Gray, after the workes begonne at Portet, had with force overthrowen the same, which yet thAmbassadour sayd the King his maister thought was not done by the commandement or consent of the Kinges Majestie. As in dede it was not, for then His Majestie woold not have moved the complaint by you there to the French King Hym self. To this matter, and also to the rest of the purposes set furth to you by the French King, there hath bene such answer made here to thAmbassadour, as the Kinges Majestie praith you, taking occasion of accesse unto Hym, to declare with most harty commendacions unto Hym self. Which is, that for the first part, His Majestie, having perceyved, aswell by you as by his Ambassadour resident here, the gret good will and affection, which He shewyth Hymself to beare to the contynuaunce of this amite and frendship with His Majestie, and his conformite to reason toching the stay of his fortifications at Portet, which ar alledged by us not loisible by the treaty, with his promesse to you for not enterprising to fortifie uppon thill at thentry of the haven against Towr Dordre, for that He thinkyth it shuld not stand with the treaty, gyvyth unto Hym his most harty thankes, and prayth

Hym most hartely, according to the expectation which His Majestie hath alwayes had of Hym, howsoever thinges hath for a litle tyme, by negligence of ministres, passed betwene Them out of square, to contynew in that love and good brotherly affection towards Hym, which His Majestie thynkyth, having bene long ago bred and engendred in the hartes of thone towards thother, cannot but endure for ever; as for His Highnes part He shalbe assured: and that further His Highnes taketh most kyndly, that, correspondent both to frendship and reason, He hath bene contented to deface the workes begon now of late at Portet, which as my Lorde Gray, seying it was a feate not agreable to the treaty (for His Majestie sent hym a copy of the treaty, as He doth alwayes in lyke cases to the rulers of his frontiers, to thentent they may the better governe themselves according to the same) thought he myght do as he did, and enterprised the thing, with more will to serve his maister, then good consideration of his maisters affayres in that behalf. So you may so undoubtedly that nother His Majestie, nor non of us, knew he did it, nor thought he wolde have done it, til he sent word over he had done the same. Which we herd to our little contentement, and he had so litle thank here for doying of the same, as we think he wilbe better advised herafre in semblable cases. Ministres, you may say, be sumtyme hotter then nedyth, and spécialement fronterers, and will gyve occasions one to another, such as myght brede gret inconveniences, wer it not the gret wisdom and frendship knitt and combyned togedres in the heddes and hartes of the maisters. His Majestie prayth Hym therfor to temporise his governours uppon his frontures, as no sharpe occasions be by them ministred; and His Majestie for his part will temporise his on the other side in semblable sort; and so thinges shall passe betwene them the more quietly and amicably; which His Majestie most desyreth, and wilbe as glad to shew Hym self conformable in all thinges that may stand with honour or reason, as his good brother can desyre, and wolbe contented to do the lyke. And for a prove therof, albeit His Majesties fortification at Bullenberg is, as you know and can well speke in it, a thing out of all doubt, both by the confession of Mons^r du Bies, as shall appere by his letters, and also by the knowledge of the French Admyral, and the rest of his colleges in commission for the peax (who as you know moved us twyse or thrise during the tyme of the treaty to ceasse the fortifications at Bullenberg, and they wold ceasse theyrs at S^t Estiens); yet you may say, forbycause his good brother the French King semyth to doubt, wheder the sayd fortifications be lawfull or no, His Majestie is pleased, and hath sent ordre for the stay of them, until it be hard, wheder His Highnes may by the treaty perfait them, them, or no; and for the tryall therof prayth his good brother to assigne sum one two or mo, such as He shall thinke convenient, to mete uppon the frontiers with others of His Majesties parte, to conside and determine the same; trusting, when it shall appere that the sayd fortifications wer begone before the treaty, that then his good brother wilbe contented his go forward with the perfection of the same.

And forasmuche as brutes may runne thither to that Court of nombres of men of warre sent from hens; you may tel the French King that undoubtedly ther is no such thing, but that unfaynedly His Majestie, having sone after the conclusion of the peax revoked almost all his garrisons at theyr own sutes, beyng hys subgettes, and uppon theyr long absence out of theyr natural cuntreys, havynge desired to se theyr wiefes and childern for a tyme, returnyth thither certain soldiours to make up the ordinary, beyng not complete; which, albeit this (we wot not what to cal it) had not chaunced, shuld of ordinary have cum over. Mary, to put dissimulation apart (as in all thinges His Majestie meanyth to deale playnly with Hym) His Highnes, havynge herd that St Jermyn, Capitayn Moyen, and others cam down to the frontiere with theyr bandes, and that by 10 and 20 the garison of theyr new fort encreased) caused the men to make the more hast over, and thought in dede to have sent more pioners over for the perfection of the worke on that side, had not the reasonable proceeding of his good brother moved His Majestie to the contrary. Which you may assure Hym hath tyckled His Majestie at the hart with kyndnes, and will not, you may tell Hym, be forgotten. And these thinges, Mr Wootton, you must set forwarde with as good dexteritie as you can. And, if they chaunce to speke of theyr galley, you may say that the Kinges Majestie, having herd yesternight by means of thAmbassadour that she was not sent home, with no little mervail, and sent to London to them of thAdmyralite (for my Lord Admyral is gon to refresh hym self for a moneth in the cuntrey) to knowe the cause therof, and to commande the depeche of her away with diligence. We trust you will not forget the setting furth of thagreement betwene you and your colleges with the Commissioners of Fraunce for the measuring with a lyne of the two braunches of the ryver, viz^t that which cummyth from Villemontyeer, and thother which cummyth from Kekes, and if nede be to cal Sir Frauncys Bernard to witnes for the same. Howbeit we think the Frenchmen so honest, as they will not deny any thing passed by them so solemenly. And desyring answer herof, we byd you most hertly wel to fare. From Chobbam, the 24th of September, 1546. As for thordre of sending letters by the ordinary postes, it makyth no matter;

matter; you nede not use it, but at your libertye, and may send expresse men as often as you list.

MCCCCXXVIII. PETRE and MAY to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASITH it your Royall Majestie to be advertised, that having receyved from my Lordes of Your Highnes Counsell a transsumpt of the French Kinges obligation, and letters from thAmbassadour there, affirming the sight of thoriginall letters¹, we met agayn upon Thursday with the French Commis-saries in the same place where we first met. And there, after some reasoning touching the credit to be given to the said transsumpt, they wer finally agreed to procede to the principall mater. And in the same, having somewhat said unto them the first day, we eftsones entred and alleged this somme of 500000 crownes &c to be due to your Majestie for 3 causes. First, bycause in thies letters, sealed and signed by the French King, it is confessed that this somme was receyved of the said French King, and employed to his use; wherfore in reason He standeth bounden to recompense the same so farre as they can not prove Your Majestie hath remitted the said debt. Our second cause was, for that they have not payed yerely the two millions, according to the treatie of More, which for this parte is made parte of the treaty of perpetuall peax. Thirdly, bycause they neither have payed the salte due by

¹ Petre on the 16th wrote to remind Paget of the letter of the 10th, to which no answer had been received. On the 20th Petre and May sent him a copy of their letter of the 10th, lest the original should have miscarried. The delay at the Court seems to have arisen from indecision, whether to send the original obligation, or a copy; for there remains a letter from the King to Petre and May, purporting to send the original to them by Nicasius Yetsweirt, and directing them to bring it back at their return. It bears the sign manual, and is indorsed, "The K^e lfe signed and not sent to M^r Petre &c. Sept. 1546." On the 22d Petre acknowledged the receipt of the copy of Francis's obligation, and on the 24th told Paget:

"Yesterday we spent the afternone with the French Commissaries, wher we hadd moch talk, and more sophistications then good reasons, of ther syde. This day we shall mete agayn, and as soone as wee shall perceyve to whatt they wyll fynally descend, which I fear wyll nott bee moche more then nothing, we wyll wryt of our proceedinges. Butt our doinges of yesterday standeth so yett in suspens, thatt I can yett wryt nothing of it, butt by conjecture to say my opinion thatt by thatt fasshion, as they have used yesterday, I think they mynde nothing lesse then to comme to any poynt."

the said treatie of perpetuall peax, nor the money due for the same. In which bothe causes, forasmoche as the treatie of perpetuall peax was not kept, the said French King is bound by thies letters to repay this money to Your Highnes. For the prove and justification of all thies partes we dyd shew, bothe the treaties, and suche reasons and persuasions of the law, as we could devise most mete for this purpose. Wherunto answer was made by them: first, that this money was frely given by Your Majestie to the French King. And to prove this, where the wordes of the writing or any other treatie (in our opinions) served not, they used certen conjecturall argumentes. Wherunto we having aunswered, and debated with moche talke all the 3 pointes by 2 hole afternones, and agreing upon no one poinct materiall, in thend they said that forasmoche as we could not agree, and the treatie had now appoynted an other mean to ende this mater, they sayed they mynded this next day to departe hens, having said as moch as they could, and therfore prayed us to subscribe a writing, which they had devised, conteyning that we had met according to the treatie, and could not agree. Wherunto we aunswered, that for our partes we thought better first to advertise Your Majestie of our doinges, and that they shuld do the same to their maister, and in the mean tyme we might eftsones consider thies pointes, and upon further aunswer either departe, or do as we shuld then be commaunded. To this they wer not willing tassent, saying the distaunce was suche to their Court, as they could not here thens in a long tyme, and therfore mynded to go away tomorrow, and eftsones prayed us to subscribe that writing. We told them that we could not subscribe a writing, conteyning that we had met according to the treatie, for the treatie woold us to have met and ended this mater before the 7th of this moneth, and it was the 8th before we hard of their comming. And agayn we said, we had never seen that, where any Commissaries have met without doing any thing, that they in that case have made any writing. But, touching the principall cause for the which we met, we told them that we wer sory we could not thoroughly agree, and yet doubted not but Your Majestie and your good brother woold, at somme other convenient tyme, cause suche quiet and frendly order to be taken in the same, as shall stand bothe with the treatie and perpetuall amitie betwene Your Majesties. And so we departed, with very good wordes of bothe sides. And, after we had bydden eche other farewell, Signor Du Pre, who was the chief Commissioner, prayed me, the Secretary, apart, to do what in me might lye, that this mater, "which" (said he) "is doubtfull, may be frendly ended" betwene the Princes Themselves; for otherwise it wilbe very hard: and for "my parte I will do the lyke;" and so we departed.

And now, Sir, seing they be gone, we mynd, according to Your Majesties pleasure, to repayre towards Your Highnes; most humbly beseching Your Majestie taccept in gracious parte our true meaninges to serve Your Highnes, though in thende we could not induce them to suche conformite, as we thincke any indifferent reasonable men would have assented unto; wherin we have neverthesse travelled to the best of our possible powers, as we alwayes shall, according to our most bounden duties, where it shall lyke Your Majestie to commaund us, by the grace of God, Whom we beseche long to preserve Your Royall Majestie. From Guisnes, the 25th of September, 1546.

Your Majesties most humble and most obedient servantes, and dayly Oratours,

MCCCCXXIX. THIRLBY to PAGET.¹

AFTER my right harty commendations. By my letters of the 16th of this monyth, sent in Mons^r Grandevela his packet, I advertised you of tharryvall of Mons^r du Bures, who brought with him 7 or 8 thousande horsemen of those of the Nether Lande, and of those of the yonge Duke of Brunswyke², of the Great Master of Spruse, and of other Alemaynes, that els coulde not passe but with the said Mons^r du Bures; his fotemen be nombred to 10 or 12 thousande. The 17 day thEmperour removed his campe to the farsyde of Danubium nere to Ingolstat, and thens have merched leysourly to this village named Mekersay³ within a leage of Tonwar⁴, near wherunto the Lansgrave, sins his departure from Ingolstat, hathe layne encamped on bothe sydes of Danubium, havynge bridges betwixt his campes to passe on eyther syde, after as he sholde se thEmperour do. The 24 of this monyth, the day of our aryvall here, after that thEmperour was come hither, the Lansgrave brought all his army on this syde of Danubium, and is encamped within fower Englisshe myles of us, in suche a stronge place as is thought harde to be approched; whiche thinge hathe made us to remayne here untill this day withowte eny enterprise, savinge that the day after our hither commynge, Seignour Pero de Columpna, John Baptista de Castalda Master of the Campe, and Cæsar de Naples, with other capitaynes and gentilmen, acompanied with a bande of haquebuttiars and 200 light horse, went towardes thenimies campe to vewe the grounde, and to knowe howe thEmperour might best approche the same; wher as the said capitaynes were in great danger and like all to have bene taken or slayne; in so moche that the brute was here for halfe a day that Cæsar de Naples was taken, whiche made meny of this campe sory; and I was also sory, for that I have bene advertised that the man is very desyrous to serve the Kinges Majestie, and is counted woon of the best capitaynes that thEmperour hathe; but at night he returnid, levinge behinde hym 20 or more of his company, eyther slayne or taken, and emonges them slayne woon gentilman of the Duke of Bavares, whome thEmperour used for a guyde in theis countries, and is very sory for the losse of that man. Here we ligh in great consultation what sholde be best for us to do; albeit thEmperours army is doubtles very great and stronge, nombred above 10 thousande horsemen and 40 thousande fotemen, with the whiche thEmperour, as they say, wolde gyve battayle in a place indifferent, yet nowe the Lansgrave is so strongly encamped that thEmperour cannot assayle hym without great daunger. And in case thEmperour wolde go either to August, or to the Duke of Wertenberges landes (as divers here hathe supposed He wolde have done) the Lansgrave lieth so in the waye, that neither of those two wayes be thought good; but in case this consultation end not shortly, the winter will make them to take a deliberation, untill the next sommer, for they say that this contrie will suffer no winter warres.

Wheras I wrote to you in my said letters of the 16th, that they of Newburgh refused to render theyr towne to thEmperour, yet the day folowinge they cam and renderd yt to thEmperours mercy, because they coulde have no better conditions graunted to them. Meny hathe marvelyd at the so rendringe therof, consyderinge that the Lansgrave was so nigh, and the towne hable, for a tyme, to have bene defended. ThEmperour aryved there on Sonday the 19 of this monythe; He gave to the Duke of Alva all the stuffe that was in the castell, whiche (as I was enformed) was very richely stuffed with the goodes of Duke Otto Henricus (to whome the towne belonged, although in myn other letters I named yt to be the Duke of Bavares). The buildinge is magnifike, wherapon the said Duke Otto Henricus hathe bestowed all that he coulde make, and therby is sore endetted. When thEmperour harde that suche antiques, images, sealinges, and other ornamentes as was fixed to the house, wer rased, He was sore displeased, for that He had (as I have harde say) gyven that towne and castell to the Duke of Bavare. Apon Wedensday laste the Emperour went to the towne, to take theyr othes for theyr fidelites, and for that two of the hed burgeses were with the Lansgrave, the spoyle of theyr houses was gyven to the Coronell Aliprendre, the Cardinall of Trente his brother, who was with 3 enseignes in the towne for the garde of the same, and theyr houses were rased to the ground. After that Newborowe was thus rendred, Raynes, a towne of the Duke of Bavares, was also rendred, whiche the Lansgrave had before taken; but sins that we here of no more rendringe. Withe desyre to here from you, and the rayther to answer to suche brute, as they make here, that the Frenchemen hathe taken Base Bullen, I bid you hartely fare weall. From Mekersay, the 28 of Septembre, 1546.

Yo^{re} assuridly,
THOMAS WESTM^l.

MCCCCXXX. WOTTON to PAGET.

SIR, my duetye remembrid. As towching thagreement made betwixte us and the President and Bouchetell for the hedde of the ryver², these men thinke they have founde a sure sterting hole. For, if in decde it can not appere that thAdmyrall consentid unto it, as he nowe playnely sayeth he didde not, and the President affyrmith the same, I feare me we can ketch no sure holde on

² Wotton's discussion on the subject with the Chancellor of France, Annebaut, Cardinal Tournon, Mons. de Maugeron, Mons. de Longueval, the President Raymond, and one other whose name he forgot, is detailed at very great length in his official despatch of this date to Henry VIII. It resolved itself into the question of fact, stated in the text.

theym,

theym, if they will needys shrynke away from it, forbycause that by theyr commission they might doo nothing at all withoute his consent. Wherein in deede our commission was larger. But I rekenid as assuridlye that it had been doone with the knowledge and consent of thAdmyrall, as I rekenid assuridlye that the President wolde never have denyed the thinge to have been agreed uppon in deede by hym and his collegue. And I marveyle the more, whye they doo stycke somuch at this mater, considering that when so ever it shalbe tryed, it shall appere that either Kesques or Vielmonstier muste needys be the hedde; yf those, that were appointid to vewe it, be suche as enye faythe in suche maters maye be given unto, as I take theym surelye to be. And in case it be founde so, then have these men made a greate mater of nothing, and yet declarid how truelye they meane in theyr proceedinges.

Sir, the Frenche King hath hadd advertisement from sondrye places that the Conte de Bure and his armye is joynid with thEmperour¹; and yet when I talkid with thAdmyrall of it, although he confessid that the King had suche advertisementes, yet he sayed it was not knowne certaynelye to be so. But if it be so in deede, then have the Protestantes, in my mynde, mervelouse undiscretelye orderid theyr maters, to suffre so smale a nombre to passe thorough such a longe cuntrey, not ones mette or fought withall. For, if they hadde been overthrowne, the which to all mennes judgement was easye to be doon, no doubt thEmperour wolde never have taryed enye lengar in Germanye. And the comminge of these menne will not onelye streingthe, but also encourage Hym verye moche, and peraventure putte the successe of thole mater in a hasarde.

A while ago departid owte of this Courte el Signor Petro Strozzi, and is gonne to the Protestantes, as I am credeablye enfourmid; not sent (as it is sayed) by the King, but I doubte moche whether thEmperour will take it so. And in case thEmperour agree with the Protestantes, or have enye good

¹ Wotton in his letter to Paget of the 22d had communicated the following intelligence relative to German affairs:

"There are divers letters in this Courte that King Ferdinand having requyrid certayne menne and ordynaunce of the cite of Vienna, by lykelyhode to be sent to thEmperour, they of the cite refused it, sayeng they hadde neede of it themselves. Wheruppon the King hath causid certayne of theym to be taken, and three of theym to be beheddid, and hath caryed away agaynst theyr willes such peces of ordonaunce as he thought meete. Wheruppon is rysen an insurrection in the towne, and they have refusid the Kinges obeysaunce; and it is feared that rather then they will be oppressid by the King, that they will submytte themselves to the Turke. The whiche newes ar of great importaunce, yf they be true; for Vienna oones gonne, what towne have you, almoste in all Germanye, able to abyde eny siege of the Turkes powre?"

successes agaynst theym, who can telle whether that maye be occasion of summe busynes betwixte thEmperour and the Frenche King? ThEmperours Ambassadour sayeth that the citezens of Strazzeburgh and Ausperg have made a mewtynerye agaynst the rulers, and have declarid that they will not be chargid nor spende enye more money in this warre agaynst thEmperour, seing that thEmperour makith theym so fayre promesses, that He intendith nothing agaynst theym, but onelye agaynst certayne rebelles. The which thinge if it be true, lyke as it seemith to me of greate importaunce for the example of it, so I thinke the said citizens will full sore repent theyr folyc. Having written thus farre, I receyvid a packet of letters from Strazzeburgh, and therin a letter from you, and a packet dyrectid to you, the which you shall receyve herewyth. And, forbycause that by the said your letters you willid me to open the packet, I didde so, saving that I meddelid not with the letters dyrectid to you.

Tandem, after good longe deliberation, the French King hath sent me a present. Hit was shewid me, that it cowde be made no sooner; but I see in a maner no newe wrought thinge in it. And emonges it there are two cuppes, the which I solde awaye to a golde smyth, when I was at Parys. The said cuppes love me so well, that they are nowe returnid to me agayne. Marye, in deede I solde theym nakid, but they returnid to me fayre bournished, and cotid with good cases. And, forbycause I had theym as good chepe, when they came to me fyrste, as I had theym nowe, I entende, God willing, to selle theym agayne; trusting that they love me so well, that they will not be longe from me, but will returne to me agayne. And thus Jesus preserve you longe in health and prosperitie. Written at Beaulne, the 29th of September, 1546.

MCCCCXXXI. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to WOTTON.¹

MR WOOTTON, afte our most hartie commendations. These shalbe to signifie unto you that Signor Polyn, Baron de la Garde, arryving here on Moundaye last, hadde audience of the Kinges Majestie the same after noone; who, afte the delyverey of the Frenche Kinges letter written with his owne hande, and a great declaration of thamitie and good affection of his maister towardes His Highnes, descended to talke of the fortification; where, sending furth eftsones thernest determynation of the French King to the contynuaunce of this peax, he spake sumwhat of the throwing downe of there woorkes by His Majesties ministres, and howe His Highnes fortified in place not well mayntenable, making thenne nevertheles an overture for sending of personages of reputation on both sides to here and determyne the mattier so, as it might appeare what either partie might do justly by the treaty. For the first parte His Majestie declared no lesse affection and good will to be in Him towardes his good brother, thenne the other hadde sett furth on his maisters behaulf, and shewed Him self most desirous of the contynuaunce of thamitie betwene Them; and, for the fortification, answered that my Lorde Graye attempted that was done without knoweledge of His Majesties pleasour, and so waded further in that mattier, as by our letters from Chobham is fully conteyned: whiche causeth us to stande no lenger in doubling the same. And, tooching the sending of Commissioners, His Majestie agreed thereunto, desiring the same might be sent assone as might be convenyently, whiche the saide Baron also semed to desire. And for declaration of His Majesties good meaning to have the question determyned with expedition, His Highnes named for his parte the Lorde Cobham Deputie of Callais, Sir John Walloppe Knight of thOrder and Governour of Guisnez, and Sir Thomas Seymour Gentleman of His Majesties Pryvey Chamber², who as youe knowe is one of the Princes uncles. Which answeere was made unto him by us of the Counsaill, and aftrewarde

² Their commission passed under the King's Stamp in the month of October. It appears by a letter from Moyle to Paget of the 31st of that month that the rumour of this commission had prevented any further proceeding under the old one; but that he and Sir Edward Wotton had privately surveyed the spot asserted by the French to be the head of the Liane, but had in consequence of the new commission forborne to examine the other head.

confirmed by His Majestic, with request that personages of like sorte and estimation might be furthwith appointed for there parte to mete with ours.

And afre this, Polyn entred a new sute for the restitution of the galleye with all the prysoners, setting furth how muche it shulde be agreable to the King his maister, and also what apparance to the woorld of amitie betwene Them; defending neverthelesse she was no good prise, which in deede was the marring of his sute; and in thende requiring that, in case it shulde not like His Majestic to gratefie the French King with this saide restitution, that thenne the Commissioners, appointed for the determynation of the fortifications, might also determyne whether the galley were just prise or no. To which mattier His Highnes answered that, in case He shulde delyvere her in suche sorte as they demaunded, His Majestic shulde be touched in honour, for that it shulde appeare He hadde caused her to be kepte all this while otherwise thenne He justely might, and shulde besides have no thanke for restitution, seing, as theye tooke it, He shulde restore nothing butt that whiche He hadde kepte unjustly, and otherwise thenne he might. Wherefore His Majestic thought best, seyng Polyn made the mocion, to have the prise tryed, and in case of a good prise, thenne His Majestic to do further as He saw occasion. Whereupon both he and we rested, and aftrewarde upon Polyns request for S^t Blankerd¹ goyng home, upon sufficient caution to be gyven in London to cume in and returne hither againe alwayes to his taker upon dayes warning, which shalbe agreed upon with his taker¹; His Majestic appointed me, the Secretary, to travaile with his taker. Whereunto he accorded; and so S^t Blankerd cummeth home upon condicion to present and rendre hymself to his taker, whenne he shalbe called for, or elles his suerties to forfait there bande.

Whenne he hadde made these overtures, and was answered as before; because the determynation of the ryvers hedde was appointed, by speciall agreement amonges the late Commissioners for the peax, to be ordered by other Commissioners, and by them to be lymyted, as you knowe, either at Kekes or Vilmountiers, in suche sorte as was agreed, which hitherto hath taken no perfitt effect; we thought good to sett furth a request that these new Commissioners for the fortifications, because theye be men of more authoritic, might also assist thother Commissioners for the ryvers hedde, and helpe to directe them to the perfection in that mattier. Which he liked very well, and promysed to make relation thereof, so as it might be remembered in the rest of there instructions.

Fynally the sayde Polyn, taking occasion to speake of the mysery of prysoners on both parties remayning with out use of there freendes and countreys, opened how it shulde be a good dede to devise sume meane of theire 'delyverance. Which maner of speche arguing an inclynation on that side to a generall delyvery, His Majestie, upon knowelege of the same, having of his princely goodnes a speciall zeale to thelpe of his subjectes, and thinking it a godly dede that all the subjectes of both sides myght have the fruition of this peax, hath been pleased to embrace the mocion, and is contented for his parte (in case the French King wilbe contented therewithall, and signifie the same to be declared to His Majestie by his Ambassadour here resident) that by a certaine daye, to be agreed upon, all prysoners on both sides (except St Blankard) shalbe discharged and sent frely home upon both sides. Which, with the rest above written, we were commaunded to discourse unto youe, aswell for your knowelege thereof, as to thentent you might take occasion with the French King to declare the same, and to knowe his mynde therein accordingly. To Whom youe must sollicite to sende personages, of like sorte to ours, for this newe commission, and further tadvertise us, whenne theires sett forwarde, what daye, and where theye shall mete, to thentent ours maye prepare themselves thereafre, and not tary 16 or 20 dayes for their commissions, as we ar commynly wont to do heretofore.

I hyre say credeably, that notwithstanding the great speaking of the batayle¹, thEmperour doth not entende to joyne in batayll, but to kepe his army together all this wynter in Germany, and soo to weare owt thadversary parte; for the moste parte of thEmperors charges be borne by the churches of Itaylye and Spayne, and other countrees where Hce and the Bisshop of Rome have to doo. Here is a sayinge that thEmperor and the Bysshop of Rome goeth about to deprive the Duke of Sax and his posterytie of thElectorship of thEmpyre, and to have another in his place. And other I can not hyre of at this tyme. Beseching Almighty God to conserve your Mastership in long and prossperous lyef, with all yours. From Bruxelles, the 7th of Octobre, 1546.

The whiche figures yn this letter, and other as occasion shall serve, I entende to use.

Syr, I wrote unto yow the 16th of the last moneth¹, as I now remembre, of certeyn comunicacion that a gentlemanne of this Cowrte, namidde *Mons^r la Planche*², hadde with me. And forbicause that yow have therof made no answer, neither unto me, nor unto hym, it maketh me suspecte that yow thinke that his wordes ar not mucche to be regardidde. But, forbicause he hathe ben heere yn this towne with me agayne, sent, as he sayde to me, by Mons^r de Longueval, who pretendith to be our verye greate freende, and that the said Mons^r la Planche more playnelye now declarid certeyn thinges unto me, the which at his first comunicacion he sunwhat touchidde, but so darkelye, that I cowde nothing perceyve what he meanidde. For yn deede he sayde then, that he, for his parte, and dyvers better then he yn this Cowrte, wolde do the beste they cowde to bringe ovr maisters to a straighter amitye, then they yet wer in; and lefte it even so. Wherby I conjectured that he had meanidde that peraventure summe overture of summe mariage shulde be made by theym to the Kinges Highnesse. But now he hathe ben playner with me; for, askinge first, whether I hadde enye answer from yow, and I sayeng that I cowde well have had none sith that tyme, he beganne to saye to me that first, for the glory of Goddes name, and the weale of al Christendom, and also for thincrease of loove and amitye betwixt ovr maisters, he desirid nothing more then that the Frenche Kyng his maister shulde rejecte the Bisshopp of Rome and his autorite; and that that wer a thinge easye to be broughte abowte, for Madame dEstampes and al her syde desyridde it, and wolde be content to travayle yn it; yea, and wolde not doute to bringe it abowte, if she mighte have the Kinges Majestie to assist her in it: and yn this mater spake, I assure yow, verye earnestelye, as his wordes sownidde, and his cowntenance shewidde: and askid me what I thoughte yn it. Wherunto I sayde, that it cowde not be unknowne to Madame dEstampes, and other of that syde that he had namidde, how the Kynges Majestie had travailid theryn yn tymes passed, though then He cowde not bringe it to passe. And therefor I thought that, if His Highnes sawe enye lykelihode to do enye goode yn it, He wolde be content to travaile yn it agayne. Marye, to labour yn vayne, or withowte lykelihode to do goode, I cowde not thinke that His Grace wold so be contentid. But Mons^r la

Planche answered me that doubtesse, yf it wer now movidde agayne, it wolde take effect, for suche wolde putte theyr hande to it as maye undertake to do it. And he said that Mons^r de Longueval sent hym to me to shew me this; but that this mater must be handelidde verye secretelye, and requyrid me to wryte to no manne of it, but to yow; and that this mater mighte beste be begonne and enteridde yn by yow and Mons^r de Longueval; and that emonge other thinges yow might wrighte to the said Mons^r de Longueval after this sorte, that if le Seigneur de la Planche be asmuch addicte to Madame d'Estampes and to him, as yow have fownde hym, and know hym to be a faithefull and true servant, and earnestelye affectionidde to the Kinge his maister, then yow doubt not but that he hath declaridde unto theym suche comunicacion, as yow hadde with hym when yow spake with hym. Wherupon he shall be demaundidde, what that was. And then will he saye that yow spake to hym of this mater, and that yow sayde that this were the verye waye to make these 2 Princes moste assuridde frendes for ever. And so shall the mater be enteridde; for they dare not wel moove the mater heere first theym selves, as he saithe; but wold that the first mocion of it shuld come oute of England. And, how be it that I know right welle that the said Mons^r La Planche hathe a subtile and craftye witte, yet he speakith so earnestelye to me of it, and I at the first sighte see so litle danger that mighte come to us of it, all though he meanidde summe crafte by it, that me thinkith the mater wolde be gyven eare to: unlesse, by suche conference as yow have had before tyme with hym, yow have cawse to suspecte his doinges. And he saithe that they ar so pressid heere now for certain occasions that the tyme coud not serve better for it, then now: and fynallye concludith, that if Madame d'Estampes might assure the Frenche King that His Highnes wold contynue his assurid frende, she wil not fayle to bringe it about. Forbicause I fownde this mater of greate importance, I was desyrouse to speake with Mons^r de Longueval my selfe; who mette me the nexte daye by agreement at the Charterewe without this towne, whiche place you know righte well. And it chawnsid verye well that, after I had had this comunicacion with Mons^r La Planche, and before I spake with Mons^r de Longueval, I receyvid your lettre of the last of Septembre, wheryn yow wille me to salute theym both. And thus the nexte daye after, when we mette at the place apoyntidde, I talkid first with Mons^r de Longueval a goode while alone. And I beganne with your recommendacions unto hym, the which he tooke verye thankefullye, and with verye fayre and gentle wordes, as yow know they can do: he was your greate and assurid frende yn all that he mighte do, etcetera: and then, at the last, shewid me that he had sent Mons^r la Planche unto me, to shew me suche newes as he hadde, and also to shew me a thing of importance, the which mighte be a meane to make owr maisters assurid freendes for ever; the which was, that yf we wolde helpe to bringe it abowte, they shulde also forsake the Bisshop of Rome, as we hadde done; and that it was a thinge that mighte now be done, and therfor wisshidde that yow wolde take the mater yn hande to do summe goode yn it. Wherunto I made that selfe answer, that I made to Mons^r la Planche the daye before; for I remembrid then no better. And he sayde agayne that the tymes wer not lyke, and trustidde that now wolde be done, that then cowde not; and wisshid no more but that the Kynges Majestie and the French Kyng might ones againe meete togyther, for then wer it done. "They have done so dyvers tymes," quod I, "yet cowde it not be done." "I tolde yow," quod he, "that the tymes ar not al one; for the Bisshop of Rome hath so of late prickidde the Frenche Kyng that now He wille verye easilye gyve eare unto it; and they will now helpe it forewarde, that then didde, nor wolde, not." I tolde hym that I supposid surelye that, if the Kinges Majestie perceivid enye likelyhode in this mater, He wolde not fayle to travayle yn it, the thinge beinge so goddelie yndeede, and so meete a waye to knitte Theym assuridlye for ever yn peace and amitye; and that I thoughte that upon enye suche lykelihode yow your selfe wolde spare no labour yn it, but thinke it moste fruytefullie bestowidde. "Wel," quod Mons^r de Longueval, "I praye yow wryte to M^r Paget what comunicacion we have hadde to gyther, and I wil speake with Madame d'Estampes, to thintent we maye worke the more assuridlye yn this mater." The whiche I promysid hym to do. Now, Syr, I praye yow to consyder this mater thouroughlye by your wysedome; for though the symplenesse of my wytte makith me ever to suspecte the medlinge with these crafty children, and therefor I am ever yn feare ne sub omni lapide lateat scorpius, yet the more I thinke upon this mater, the lesse daunger I can perceyve yn it; yea, all though it wer attemptidde and tooke none effecte. And the mater well wayde, yf it be fownde to be expedyent to be attemptid, then wolde the olde proverbe not be forgotten that saythe, "beate the yron when it is hote."

One thinge also theese menne praye yow to remembre, that it maye not appeere by letters nor comunicacion, that they have ben the breakers or beginners of this mater.

came

came yn my mynde, that as soone as the Emperour and the Bisshop of Rome shall perceyve this mater to be yn hande (for it will be harde to have it longe kepte secret, They having suche freendes heere yn the Cowrte) anone They will go abowte to lette it by all meanes possyble, and the more, for feare leaste the Frenche King shulde joyne with the Protestantes against Theym. And then is it to be thoughte that extreme labour will be made to staye it, and greate thinges will be offerid for it, rather then it shulde take effecte. Yea, and who can telle, whether this be a polycye to make the Bisshop of Rome to be a sollicitour to the Emperour, rather to lette the Frenche Kyng have Millain, then that it shulde take effect? The whiche thinge yf They cowde bringe abowte, then wer there suche a stronge amitye betwixte Theym three, that it wer not muche profitable for theyr neighbours. But then I consydre agayne at tother syde, that yf suche wer, or be meanidde, yn this mater, then these menne maye do it well yn nogh, though the Kynges Majestie wold refuse to travaile in it. Thus the crafte, that perchaunce may be usidde yn handeling of this mater at one syde, and the greate desyre to see it take effecte for the greate commoditie that shulde ensue of it to all Christendome, on thother syde, makith me summe tymes to doubte what is to be done yn it. But I neede not to trouble my selfe with theese thinges, the which shall be so substancyallye looked upon, and so deepelye consyderidde at home. And therefor making heere an ende I beseech Jesu longe to preserve yow yn helthe and prosperite. Written at Digeon, the 9th of October, 1546.

one of the Kinges Majestyes two Princypall Secretaries, this be delivered.

MCCCCXXXIV. WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

HIT maye please Your Majestie to be advertisid, that the first of this moneth I receyvid letters from my Lordes of Your Majesties moste honorable Counsaill of the 24th of the laste. And the thirde of this present the Frenche Kyng, lyeng at a castell of his owne namid Rouver, within two leages of Digeon, I had audience of Hym. And having declarid unto Hym theeffecte

of myne instruccions, He sayed that He intendid in theese and all other thinges to procede wyth Your Majestie according unto reason and equite, and none otherwise. And as for my Lord Gray, He sayed he had in deede doone amisse and was to hastye, and, as muche as laye in hym, had gonne abowte to breake the treatye; and that, in case his menne wolde have been as hastye as my Lord Gray was, worse wolde have comme of it. How be it, He trustid Your Majestie wolde so provide for it, that the lyke shulde chaunce no more; and so wolde He lykewise for his parte. For He sayed He considerid verye well, that rulers of the frontiers chieflie will not stycke to minister lyke occasions, unlesse they be well lookid to. And, as for the ceassing of the woorke begonne at Bolenberg, He sayed that it was so farre fourth all redye, that it was defencible against enye powre. How be it, for the vewing and tryeng of that mater and other lyke, He had his Commissioners there all redy, the whiche shulde joyne with suche as Your Majestie wolde depute to it, when they wolde. And as for the reysinge and gatheringe of menne of warre, He sayed that for his parte He sent none downe to the frontiers, and that Your Majestie had been misenfourmid, that newe companyes of tenne and twentye shulde entre into his forte; for it was not so; nor Saint Jermyn, as He sayeth, hath no bande of menne, nor He entendeth to sende none thither, unles Your Majestie augmente the nombre of your ordynarye garrisons therabowte, the which He trustith You will not: and fynallye concludid with verye gentle wordes, that Your Majestie shulde be assurid that He wolde be readye not onlye to fulfyll all that He is bounde to doo by the treatye, but also enye thinge ellis that enye verye and assurid freende wolde doo for an other; and doubtid not but to fynde the lyke in Your Majestie. And so with his moste hartye commendacions, requyrid me to wryte to Your Majestie.

The Commissioners appointid for the said tryall of the fortificacions, ar le Mareschal du Biez, Mons^r de Thais, and oon more with theym; who wilbe readye to attende theruppon, when they shalbe advertisid that Your Majesties Commissioners shall be readye for the same. Having written this farre, I receyvid letters from my Lordes of Your Majesties moste honorable Counsaill of the laste of September; and perceyving by the contentes therof, the procedinges of the Baron de la Garde with Your Majestie, and thansweres made unto hym, doubting whether uppon his returne they wolde peradventure alter theyr Commissioners, I sent to the Courte everye daye to have knowledge of his retourne; but he came not in two or three dayes after. And as soone as I perceyvid that he was comme, sending to theym to the Courte

to declare unto theym, whome Your Majestie had deputed, and what personages they were, and requyring theym to depute lyke, not onelye for the mater of the fortresses, but also to joyne and assiste theym that all readye were deputed for the mater of the hedde of the ryver. Wherunto they aunswerid that they wolde sende oone to theyr Ambassadour with aunswers aswell theruppon, as uppon all other thinges that the said Baron de la Garde had had conference of with Your Majestie, and that by theyr Ambassadour Your Majestie shulde be advertisid of all.

I have perceyvid, by my freendes, the goodnes that it hath pleasid Your Majestie to shewe me as concerning the dividendes of the Church of Yorke, and for my licence of non residence, being in your Majesties service; for the which I rendre moste hartye thanks unto Your Majestie; beseeching God, that for the manifolde greate benefytes daylye receyvid at your handes, I maye be able to doo summe service to Your Majesties contentacion. And thus Jesus preserve Your Hieghnes longe in helth, and all felicite. Written at Digeon, the 10th of October, 1546.

M^R WOOTTON, I commend me most hertly unto you, and do you to understand that the Kinges Majestie hath seene your letters both to His Majestie, and to me apart, and takyth all thinges in the same very well; signifying unto you that, wheras it was told you by the Frenche King that one shuld cum to his Ambassadour with information of his mynd concernyng thapoyntement of other Commissioners to joyn withe those whom the Kinges Majestie hath assigned for that purpose; the sayd Ambassadour hath bene sythen with the Kinges Majestie, and spake no woorde of any suche matter, or other, but of that brablyng busynes of S^t Blancart, who in the meane tyme that the Kinges Majestie had sent to his taker to let hym home uppon sufficient suretyes in London, to be furthcummyng when he shuld be demaunded by his taker, did fall to an agreement for his raunsom, and that or ever Polyn cam hither, so as that pleasure, that His Majestie thought to have shewed to S^t Blankart, hath bene taken away by his own consent and agreement to pay 7000 crownes. Which agrement, thAmbassadour hath tawght the Baron to say now, he made for feare of ill handelyng, and I wot not what; so as I think within a while they will alledge that, in cace a man, beyng yolden in the feld, gyve his fayth to be a prisoner, his promise byndyth hym not, for that he did make it for feare of deth, and to save his lief.

But, for the purpose of your letters to me in ciphre, I pray you to take the payne eftesones to speke with Mons^r Longuevale, and after my harty commendations to say that I thank hym both for the good opinion that he hath of me, and also for the good will that he shewyth hymself to beare to the contynuaunce of thamite betwene our maisters, wherin for my part also ther shall want nothing. But, tooching this overture now set furth, the maner of the breeking of it is such, with the circumstances, as I think my self to have cause to suspect a practise for the recovery of Bullen now out of hand, before the day appoynted by treaty. Wherunto surely, havynge bene my self a ministre to make the treaty but yesterday, I thinke it not convenient I shuld be a ministre tomorow to alter it; and the Kinges Majestie, I assure you, will not lyke the mocion of it, for it is the kay, wherewithall His Highnes hopith to kepe surely locked unto Hym the dore of his good brothers frendship: which beyng ones set wyde open, even sodenly, He doubtith He myght even sodenly afre be set litle by. And, to tell hym what cause I have to suspect this to be the practise, we know here that the French King hath alredy made gret meanes to be joyned in league with the Protestantes; wherunto they will not agre, unles He wyll forsake the Bishoppe of Rome. Now beyng thus far entred alredy, and then to cum to the poynt afterward, as it wer for our sake and to do us pleasure, and so to looke for sum reciproke at our hand, when the thing wold even in dede be done, though we sat still and did nothing, I can not lyke the proceding of it. To have a meting betwene the Prynces, as I lyke it well, so to have a meting, and the matters wherfore they shuld mete beyng not before disgrossed and brought to a conclusion, myght brede lesse frendship after, then before the meting. If Mons^r Longuevale think it good that meanes be made to take away jelousyes, we have a debt owing us, we have a pension viager due to us, and a perpetual pension due to the posteritie; and claymes and titles ar not clerly out of the booke. And these be matters to worke uppon, in my fantazy; and these be the same that La Planche and I devised on at Calais; wherin, and all other thinges that I may honestly, and with discharge of my dewty towards my maister and cuntrey, I wilbe glad to put to my hand to the best of my power, for the contynuaunce of thamitie betwene both Theyr Majesties.

Here we have no newes worth the wryting, but looke still alwayes for sum from you, and I assure you that thofterner you write, the better you shall please His Majestie, and it makyth no matter for the charge of the same. Thus I byd you with my most harty commendations hartely well to fare. From Wyndsour, the 19th of October, 1546.

MCCCCXXXVII. CARNE to PAGET.

PLEASYTH yt your Mastership to undrestande, that yesterdaye came letters to the Lady Regent here from thEmperour, of the 12th of this, but no poste; which wer conveyde by an adventurer a fooete, throwe the Landsgraves campe, and so to Spyres, and therhens wer sent with diligens hyther: for to Spyres herehens is no danger. Thadvertismentes that I can lerne therof credeably bee, that thEmperour hath wonne thre townes, two by sawt and oone by appoyntment. By appoyntment Nuburge; by sawt, Rayn and Tunwarde; at which assawtes He loste many men. Therhens removede to Ulmes, entendinge to ley siege to hyt, tyll yt be wonne by sawt or by appoyntment, and that He entendythe to tarrye with his armye all this wynter within the Duke of Wyttynburge¹ ys contre, who ys with the Landsgrave, for that yt ys a verye plentuouse contre. Further I am enformede credeably, that thEmperour doth practyse with the capitaynes of the Landsgraves campe, to withdrawe them to Hym with theyr souldiours, in gevinge them dowble souldes. Moreover yt ys advertysede from Spyres that the Landsgrave ys owt of his campe in the towne of Norlyngen, and that his souldiours doo busily call for money. ThEmperour hath gyven Hym here nowe by the States of Brabant only, beinge at Lovayn, towards the payment of certen debtes of hys, thre hundryth thowsen gyldrens. The other States, as of Flaundres, and others of all the Lowe Countres, muste nowe folowe; so that yt ys reckenyde to amownte in all his Lowe Countreis to a millyon of gyldrens at the least. Also He hathe gyven Hym half the revenuse of the Churches throwe owt his realmes dominions and empyre, whereas He may commande.

They saye here that the Frenche King hath a great army redy in Piemount, to invade the Duchy of Mylayn. Other occurrantes here bee none, but that Somersett the heraulde departed hens this mornyng. And thus I humbly commende me to your Mastership; beseechinge Almighty God to conserve the same with all yours, in long and prosperous lyef. From Bruxelles, the 23th of Octobre, 1546.

MCCCCXXXVIII. CARNE to PAGET.

PLEASYTH yt your Maistership. This daye in the mornynge came letters to the Lady Regent from Spyrse of the 15th of this; thadvertismentes wherof, as I am enformed, be that thEmperour hathe rendred to Hym and gotten fyve townes that wer ageynst Hym, wherof two by sawte, the other rendrede: Wherof Eslyngen and Tumbynga¹ be two of them; which Tumbynga was the towne that letted moste thEmperours victuales and provisions for his campe, that came by Danubium, and was gotten by sawt: and that thEmperor passed with his armye by the Landsgraves campe, and that the Duke of Lunyburge, being of the Landsgraves campe, ys slayne with a pece of artilerye. ThEmperour had then somened the towne of Ulmes, and hath fownde a mountayn by the towne, from whens He may soo beate into the towne that hit ys thought that yt cannot holde owt 8 dayes. In the laste skyrmyche ther wer slayne of thEmperours men, abowt 8 hundrithe; but no notable man of renowme. How many wer slayne of the other parte ys nothinge spookyn of, but that the saide Duke is slayne. His armye ys alsoo well provided of victuales. This is sayde that the Ladye Regent reported openly, being very joyous, as yt semede, in repourtynge hyt. Alsoo She is advertised that the Duke of Wyttynberge² haeth byn to gather more men, to enforce the Landsgraves armye, and ys towards hym with twenty thowsen men more; which they saye here be of the peysantes of the countre. They here doo rejoyse of this late newese, more then they wer wonte, how soever the game goethe. And, Sir, forasmoch as yt ys arryved syns my laste letter, I thought good to advertyse yt. And havinge no other, do commyt your Maistership to the conservation of Almighty God. From Bruxelles, the 24th of Octobre, 1546.

MCCCCXXXIX. WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

Hir maye please Your Majestie to be advertisid that the 17th of this moneth I receyvid letters from my Lordes of Your Majesties moste honorable Counsaill of the 9th of the same moneth¹, I being then at Langres, from whence the Frenche King was departid the daye before. And, how be it that I was thrise at the Courte to speake with the King, yet it was Sondaye the 24th of this moneth, er I had audience of Hym. At what tyme having declarid theffecte of myne instructions unto Hym, He said that his Ambassadour had so written unto Hym lykewise; and sayde that the lyke reason, as made Your Majestie to suspecte his ministres, shulde make Hym suspecte Your Majesties ministres, yf suspicions shude move Hym. For why shulde Your Majestie fortifye at Habletune² or at Bullingbergh, yf You were myndid to make restitution of Boleyn? But He sayed Your Majesties promes movid Hym more then enye suche suspition; and so ought Your Majestie to beleve his promes to. And as for Portet, He sayed it shulde sufficientlye appere, when it were well examynid, that it was begonne longe before the treatye; and that He meanid not to buylde it, to thintent to threaten enye vyolence to Your Majesties peecis, but onelye for the revitailinge of his owne forte, yf enye suche neede shulde be. Marye, if he shulde fortifye at the poynte of the haven, that in deede mighte seeme to be to the prejudice of Your Majesties peeces; but that, He sayde He had told me all readye He wolde not doo. And in case anye had cause to complayne of others ministres, He sayed He had cause to complayne of my Lord Gray, who had so usid hymself, that, if his ministres had usid the lyke, Your Majesties were lyke to be all readye in warre agayne. And as for Mons^r du Bies, He sayede He had namid other in the comission, and he shulde not medle in it. As for thother poyntes, He made no aunswere to to theim, savinge for the shippes of warre. Wherunto He sayed that by lykelyhode they were Scottes pyrates that molestid Your Majesties subjectes, and that they hadd doone the lyke to his owne subjectes and to the Flemmynges to, and that if He mighte catche enye of theym, He wolde punishe them, and that, seing Your Majestie armyd your shippes for no other intent, his merchauntes shulde go and trafique, as they were myndid to have doon; trusting to Your Majesties promes therin. Wherunto I sayed that the reasons, the which to His Majestie seemid lyke, seemid not so to me; for everye bodye mighte perceyve that the fortifieng at Habletune and Bullingebergh was not doone to putte the Frenche Kinges forte in daungier, but for other purposes, for the which they mighte well be made by the treatye; but as for Portet, every man mighte perceyve that the fortifyeng there muste needes be prejudiciall to Your Majesties peeces; and what so ever were pretendid by it, yet the thinge wolde shewe it self, whether it were so in deede or not. And whether it were begonne before the treatye or not, I sayed shulde appere by the examynacion of it. "It shall so in deede," quod the King, "and so shall it also appere to the King my good brother, when it is well considerid that the buylding at Portet cowde not be so to the prejudice of his peeces, as He is persuadid that it is, but rather for the better revitailing of my forte, yf neede shall be. Wherefore," quod the King, "I shall requyre the King my good brother, that thinges maye passe betwixte Us equallye. For it is not reason that my good brother fortifye where it pleasith Hym, and I shall not doo the lyke. It is not reason that his ministres shall breake downe my buyldinges, and myne shall not doo the lyke. It is not reason that my ministres for theyr doinges shalbe suspectid, and I, having more cause to complayne of his ministres, shall not doo the lyke. Yf I shulde suffre all this, I shulde be usid rather lyke a subjecte then lyke a freende. This," quod He, "I declare thus frankelye unto you, entending the contynuaunce of this amitye betwixte Us for my parte, as my good brother dothe for his parte; the which maye be beste conservid, if thinges shall passe equallye and indifferentlye betwixte Us." Sir," quod I, "as for the King my maisters fortifications, ar not so muche [made] where it lystith Hym, as where He mighte by the treatye make theym. As for my Lord Gray, though he didde a thing withoute the King my maisters commaundement, yet he didde that thinge that he tooke that he mighte doo by the treatye: wherwith he thoughte no manne ought to be offendid. And in cace Your Majestie shewid enye reasonable cause, whye to suspecte the King my maisters ministres, I doo not doubte but that His Majestie wolde waye it, and conside it as it oughte to be. Nor the King my maister requyrith not, but that thinges maye, indifferentlye and according to the treatye and good amitye, passe betwixte Your Majesties." "Well," quod the King, "that is in deede the beste meanes for the contynuaunce of our amitye. And, as for my parte, I will not fayle to doo that the treatye and amitye betwixte Us dothe requyre:" and so requyrid me to wryte to Your Majestie.

After

After these matyers paste, the King shewid Hymself better disposid to talke with me, then at eny tyme heretofore. He sayed He had receyvid letters oute of Germanye of the 16th of this moneth; and that thEmperour was passid the Danow agayne, so that He is nowe on this side of it, and had taken certayne townes on the ryver syde, and was drawing, as it seemid, to the Duke of Wirtenberges countrey; and that the Duke of Wirtenbergh hath gatherid of other, besides the greate armye of the Protestantes, 16 thowsande footemen and two thowsande horsemen, the which he will laye in certayne townes upon his frontiers pour faire teste agaynst thEmperours men, tyll the reste of the greate armye of the Protestantes joyne with hym. And that thoughe thEmperour keepe the open feeldes, yet it seemith that He fleeth the batayle as muche as He maye; for He offerith not to fighte but at his advantage: and that the Protestantes were also passid the Danow, and not farre from thEmperour. How be it, the Frenche King sayeth that He thinketh that, unlesse summe chaunce dryve them to fighte, the tyme being so farre passid, they will not fighte at this tyme; and that He thinketh that thEmperour will either see, whether He can take the townes of the Duchye of Wirtenbergh, and keepe his menne there in that good plentyfull countrey all this wynter, or ellis passe thoroughe it into Brisgow, and so by Elzate, Lorayne, and Luxenburgh retourne into Flaundres; and the meane season lodge his menne of warre in townes obedyent to Hym, as Spyre, Wormes, Mentz, Tryer, and suche other; and that the grounde of the countrey of Wirtenbergh is so fatte, that if it rayne there three dayes, as it had raynid heere alredye two or three dayes, well, thEmperour mighte marche with his armye, but it shulde be withoute enye greate ordinaunce, for it wolde sticke so in the myre that no horses cowde drawe it owte agayne; and that thEmperour was stronger of horsemen then the Protestantes, but the Protestantes stronger of footemen by 25 thowsande then thEmperour. And, when I sayed that, if the batayle were not faughte, and the mater endid nowe, I doubtid howe the Protestantes were able to make money yn noughe for suche an armye agayne for the nexte yere, the King sayed, that in deede it had coste them largelye, and so had it thEmperour to. "Yea, mary, Syr," quod I, "but the Bishop of Rome and the Prynces of Italye beare the mooste parte of thEmperours charges." "No Prynces," quod the King, "but the Bishop of Rome hath boron a parte of it in deede, but not so lyberallye as thEmperour lookid for; for thEmperour hath been fayne to lende the Legate a greate summe of money to paye his menne;" the which summe (as I remembre) the King expressid to be 25 thowsande ducates, and that there there was summe busynes for that matyer betwixte thEmperour and the Bishop of Rome. So that the King rekenid that the charges wolde werye thEmperour as soone as the Protestantes; and that the Protestantes cause a Diet to be gatherid, to labour that the Prynces and townes, that ar of the religion and not of the leage, shall entre into it; as, the King of Denmarke, the King of Suede, the Conte Palatyn, the Marquyse of Brandenburgh, and dyverse other Prynces; and as Norinbergh, and dyverse other townes; wherby they shalbe the bettre able to mayntayne the warres. And that He heerith that the Protestantes will sende shortelye to Hym, and to Your Majestie, for ayde and assistance; and that, if they doo, He will heere what they saye, and communicate the mater with Your Majestie, and use your counsaill and advise in it. And, when I askid, whether enye bodye tooke upon hym to be a medyatour betwixte theym; He sayed that the King of Pole had travaylid in it, but that thEmperour sayed that there coulde be none agreement made betwene theym; and that the King of Pole hath declarid, that, if enye invasion shulde be made in the Duke of Saxonyes countrey, that then He wolde ayde hym. And so muche hath Duke Moryce sayed also, forbycause that thElectours Lordships and his lye so knytte and minglid to gyther, that the oone can not take hurte, but the other muste take hurte to.

The King tolde me also that Gerard, thEmperours Secretarye, hath been with the Turke, and hath had an aunswere nothing pleasant; and that the Turke, perceyving this busynes betwixte thEmperour and the Germaynes, entendith to be doing agayne in Christendomme the nexte somer.

These newes He willed me to certifye Your Majeste of. And thus Jesus preserve Your Majestie longe in health and all felycyte. Written at Tannay by Bar, the 26th of October, 1546.

MCCCCXL. VAUGHAN to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.¹

PLEASETH yt your right honorable Lordships to be advertisyd, how bifore I went to receyve any money of the Treasurer of France², I toke this order with M^r Knyght; that we wold receyve³ in the forenoones, and coole and trye in thafternoones that whiche was receyved. Upon this order I receyvyd yesterday bifore none 20000 crownes, whiche being receyvyd, put into 8 bagges sealed, and so layed in a cheste in the Treasurers of France his lodgyng tyll after none. At thafternone M^r Knyght and I in the presence of the same Treasurer ageyn openyd and wayed out of one bagge aboutes the number of 200 crownes one after an other. Those being wayed, and, as we could pike them out, being of the hevyest, kept within 1 grayn of theyr just poix; and bycause yt was an infynyte woorke to waye every crown alone by hit self, I cawsyd M^r Knyght to putt a marke weight of the hevyest of those crownes that we had bifore wayed into one balance, and to waye asmany as they wer in number in an other balance, to trye how they wold come out in weight. We founde that 73 crownes weyed a marke weight, which ys 8^{oz} of the hevyest crownys that we had chosen out. And so passing with the sayd 73 hevy crownes to waye the crownys of every of thother bagges, we founde after our waying of 4 sondry draughtes taken out of every of those 8 bagges, every draughte one after an other to come within half a crown weight to the weight of the fyrst hevy crownes; and after the weighte, to be in nombre wythe the hevy crownes also 73 crownes. In these 20000 crownes by us receyved (as I gesse) there maye be in every bagge conteyning 2500 crownys, aboutes 150 or 200 crownes of a new stampe and forge, basser in gold, as we do think, then thother, but not lesse in weight. Of these being of sondrye forges, we have piked out 15 peces, whiche M^r Knyght at the wryting of this letter was taking thassayes of; of the tryall wherof I can nothing wryte, the passage departyng, or thassayes wer made. Those undoubtydly ar to be thought woll rise muche baser then the crownes of thold forge. The residue we fynd resonable good, keping the poix as before. But, by cause the Kinges

Majesties acquytance¹ ys made with this clause, “avons receu cinquante deux mil trois cens soixante huict escus dor soleil et seise solz Tournois en escus dor soleil de bon et juste poix purite et valeur, ayans de present cours en France;” for these wordes “ayans de present cours en France,” the Treasurer thinkethe and affirmethe that, forasmuche as these crownes of a new forge ar current presently in France, they ought by the wordes of the Kinges Majesties acquytance to be taken. Whose wordes albeit do not sufficiently answer thother wordes that go before, to saye “de bon et juste poix purite et valeur,” yet by the these wordes following “ayans de present cours en France” shall they ever make a styckyng and a brablyng. Wherefore, if it stode with your honorable pleasures to alter thacquytance into some other wordes, and to sende yt me sealed, I shall reserve thother by me. How be yt, he desyryd me, or he began to paye me any money, to lett hym have a copie of the Kinges Majesties acquytance; which I gave. But I shall do well ynoughe with hym, as I gesse, so your honours sende an other under the Kinges Majesties brode scale. Whiles I was wryting hereof, the wynd began to blow strongly at the northwest, and stayed the passage. In the mean whiles M^r Knyght had made thassayes of the 15 peces above mencyned, all whiche wer founde to be golde of 22 carettes and 6 greynes, saving one or two which wer of 20 carettes and 5 greynes and 22 carettes and 5 graynes; and of the basenes of those 2 I thinke the Treasurer hathe not many in all his money. I cawsyd M^r Knyght to make an assaye of a good crowne that

MCCCCXLII. MONT to KING HENRY VIII.

SERENISSIME Rex, ac Domine clementissime. Post ultimas ad Majestatem Vestram quartadecima Octobris datas litteras¹, nihil in hisce partibus notatu dignum contigit. Medio tempore ipse ad Nurnbergam accessi, tum ut binas Majestatis Vestræ litteras, ad Episcopum Westmonasteriensem scriptas, huc vero ex Argentina ad me missas, secure et tuto transmittere possem, quandoquidem nullus ex hac urbe nuncius Cesaris castra accedere ausus fuit, tum ut propius constitutus, tam insperati silentij et desidiæ causas cognitās Majestati Vestræ significarem; et quantum post diligentem inquisitionem animadvertere potui. Neutra pars pugnam committere vult in aperto campo, et sub æquo Marte; sed uterque exercitus in occasiones, preoccupaciones, et insidias intentus est. Cesar equitatu superior est, Protestantes pedites et tormentis bellicis; vicinæ enim urbes Augusta, Ulma, et reliquæ pulverem et tormenta copiose suppeditant; quotidie levia prælia fiunt; et multo plures tam ex nobilibus quam plebeis a Cesaris quam Protestantium parte occumbunt. Lantgravius sub publico mandato edixit, ne quem Italum aut Hispanum captivum servant, sed omnes interficiant; manumissi enim nullam fidem aut juramentum servant, quia hereticos indignos putant quibus data fides servetur. Ante dies decem ad viginti quatuor milia novorum peditum ad Protestantium castra a civitatibus confœderatis missa sunt, ut commeatum a Cesare interciperent, sed eos parum profecturos vereor. Cesar enim Danubium et Lechum flumina a tergo aperta habet, et plurium Episcoporum vicinas regiones, tum modo tempus ulterius in castris commanendi præterijt, et Cesar commeatum et frumentum ex finitimis regionibus Ratisbonam conveyi et comportari facit, ubi hybernaturus creditur; ad eam enim urbem necessaria ex Bavaria, Austria, Stiria, et Bohemia, conveyi per Danubium possunt, et ditiones Episcoporum multorum Johannitarum² et Nurnbergensium finitimæ sunt. Nurnbergenses utrique exercitui, tam in ipsa urbe, quam in agro eorum, permittunt ea comparare et coemere, quæ eis usui sunt; et major annone pars modo ad Cesarem per Nurnbergam et eorum agrum adfertur. Coram aperte vidi eos nihil contra Cesarem committere velle. Palatinus Elector, Episcopus Colonien-sis, Monasteriensis, Comites plurimi, et Nurnberga sedent quieti et neutrales, tametsi miles Hispanicus et Italicus plus viginti pagis exusserit in ditionibus Ottonis Henrici et Philippi Palatinorum, nec ulli pepercerit. Protestantium

Protestantium adhuc Ulme congregati sunt, et audio eos in triennium fedus renovasse. Multa de Gallie Rege multi sibi pollicentur, et constat crebros nuncios hinc inde mitti. Joannes quoque Sturmius modo ad Regem remissus est. Recrodo quoque regimentum unum peditum concreditum est a Saxone et Hesso. Cesar bellum studio trahit, ut nostros omni ære exhauriat; quo facto facile nostros depugnabit. Civitatibus enim exhaustis et a negotiatione impeditis non diu supererit quod contribuant. Cesar hybernare decreverat in Ducatu Wirtenbergensi, prout militibus promiserat in ultima lustratione, sed ab eo proposito deturbatus et dejectus est a Saxone et Hesso, qui hoc iter preoccuparunt. Verisimile est majorem equitum partem apud Cesarem hyematuram; plurimi enim ex ijs regredi domum non audent, nisi hoc bello confecto; et inprimis hij, qui non longe ab Hessia et Saxonia domicilia habent. Saxo quoque et Hessus, vel minimum alter eorum, remanere cum exercitu in ijs partibus cogetur; ne, ijs absentibus, Cesar Augustam et Ulmam invadat. Nisi externorum Regum intercessione hoc bellum direptum fuerit, aut nostri a Majestate Vestra Serenissima et Gallie Rege adjuti consilio et auxilio fuerint, timendum est eos a Cesare tandem devictum iri; Germania enim inter se divisa est, et nostrates Episcopi et creaturæ Papisticæ, quarum per Germaniam et Hispaniam plurime sunt, in hoc bellum largiter pecuniam profundunt. Dux Mauritius nuper in Bohemia apud Regem Ferdinandum fuit, quem is varijs modis, tum Electoratus promissione, tum totius Saxonie infeudatione in Electorem Saxonie concitare vellet; sed hactenus Mauritius nihil adversus Electorem tentavit, sed quietus et medius conquievit, verum instructas apud se tum equitum tum peditum copias habet. Rex Ferdinandus jam diu Bohemos quoque sollicitavit, ut Electoris Saxonie ditiones invaderent; verum ij egredi limina regni sui recusant, et pro hoc anno depugnatum puto; miles enim amplius sub dio propter aeris inclementiam perdurare non potest, et tam ex Cesaris quam ex Protestantium castris plurimi pedites aufugiunt. Ego sub debita et observantia et fide Regiæ Vestræ Majestati me suppliciter addico et mancipo. Datum Oxonie, nona Novembris, anno 1546.

And because the 8th day at nyght thEmperours artillarie made so great a shotte, I sent John Honynges and Bluemantell in the mornynge to the campe, with Somerset, to lerne the cause therof, that ye myght have the knowledge of some veryties unwritten.² Mary, my messengers at their retourne tolde the tale so to me, that if Somerset shall so tell yt to you, ye shall knowe the great shotte of our artillarie to be only for dischargynge of the peaces, with a litle bruyte of the Kinge of Romaynes entre into Saxe. The 10th day I toke occasion to go se Lawingen, and to visite Mons^r du Grandvela, because he hathe bene syke, and tolde hym, to make hym mery, that I wolde tell hym suche felde newis as I had: firste, that Petro Strozy sholde be gone to Constantinoble; what to do, he koulde better gesse then I: secondly, that the Frenche men were practising with them a new aliaunce: I sayd yt myght weall be a newe alyaunce, but the practise was olde. He said to me, "Truthe yt ys, that " Petro Strozy ys at Venyce, and with the Frenche Ambassadour there hathe " moved for ayde and mony, and suche other thinges as they cannot have " there graunted them, and assuringe them sylfes moche of the Kinges " Majestie your master, therby to bringe their purpose the better to passe; " but that," said he, "is their fynes. MAY it please Your moost Excellent Majestic to be advertised that, the 15th of this present, we, togeder with the French Commissioners, vewed the workes at St. Estiennes and Portest. They demaundayng of us what we thought by those workes, we answeyrd that, as for that worke at St. Estiennes, to our apperaunce was incertain, whether it was begonne bifore the date of the treatie or not; and further that it semed to us that an 100 laborers might in 3 howres raise a greatter peace of worke than that is. Thay replied that certainlie it was commenced, and more the treatie did not require. And, as for that worke at Portest, we seid that we sawe nothinge there, but a trenchē that Mons^r de Bies caused to be cast there for the savegarde of his ordonnance. They wold lenger have debated this matter with us, but that we required them to enter into some communication of the limittes in this meane tyme, till we received Your Majesties resolution concernynge the fortifications. And, at our departinge, we appointed to mete the next daye, to thintent we might vew and discerne the lenger and gretter river of Kekes and Villemountiers, according to Your Majesties instructions given by thinformation of Your Highenes Ambassatour in Fraunce. And as that daye we and Sir Thomas Moyle, Sir Thomas Palmer, and Your Majesties Surveiour at Bolloyne² (Sir Edward Wotton, Your Majesties Treasourier of Caleis, being absent, as than and yet is sore vexed with the gowte) we mette with them at Selles, and vewed first the oone river, and after that other, in diverse places, fyndyng greate difficultie to judge the bigger of them. But, after long debatement, we agreed that on Weddinsdaye the 17th of this present 2 of there parte, viz. Courte de Bourne and John de Pocho, and other 2 of our part, that was Sir Harry Palmer and Your seid Majesties Surveiour at Bolloyne, shuld by just mesure trie the lenger of those 2. That doone, they

promised to make us a reasonable answere concernyng the hedde and limittes, desiring us to dyne with them at Ardres on Thursdaye next folowyng, forasmoch as they hadd dynd with us bfore at Your Majesties castell of Guysnes: wherunto we consentyd.

And on the seid Weddynsdaye those appointed mesurers did fynd by trew mesure that branch of Villemontiers to be the lenger by 2 thousand passes. And this daye we went to them to Ardre to dyner. After dyner they renewed the discourse of fortifications, wherein we required to staye till we might receive Your Majesties answere in that behalf, which we affirmed to be to morow at night. Praying them that we might fall to some poynt in the meane ceason for the limittes; they answered that they hadde advertised the Kinge there master of our allegation concernynge those 2 branches, to knowe his resolution therin, addyng that they knew of no such agrement as we alledged; and uppon answere, which they lykewise assure to be to morow at night in that poynt received, they promysed to commune with us for the seid hedd and limittes: and, so stayinge for that tyme, have appointed, apou the answere to be sent from Your Highenes and fro the Kyng there master, to mete agayne on Saterdaye next. Yet nevertheles, afore this conclusion, they moch charged us, in that we did so slenderly delaye the procedynges to the full conclusion of fortifications, havynge, as appereth by our commission, full autoritie to conclude.

Wherfore we humblie require Your Majesties resolute answere, in what poyntes we shall conclude with them, and wherein we shall staye; for we perceive that they are fully determyned to conclude with us in no poynt, till the matter of fortifications be resolved. Notwithstandyng we intende, asmochas we maye, (according to the tenour of a letter sent from Your Majesties Counseil, which by reason of contrary wether came to our handes but this daye in the mornynge) to differre the full conclusion thereof, till we be advertised of Your Majesties further pleasure in the same.

And finallie, le Baron de la Garde complaynyng of the miserable imprisonment of them that were taken in the galee, who, he saith, being in the Marshallsea amongst theves, begge dayly for there lyvyng, required us to write unto Your Highenes, humblie requiryng the same to pitie them, soo that, for their money, which he will send thither purposely (as he saith) by his servaunt, they maye be released of there imprisonment. Thus we pray to God to send Your Highenes moost happie and prosperouse successe in all Your Majesties moost Royall affaires. From Your Majesties Castell of Guysnes, the 18th of Novembre, at 10 of the clocke at night.

Post script. After all thies debattes they wold have pressed us to have spoken of the matter of the galey, which we refused to doo, till the other matters were fully determynd.

By Your Majesties moost humble and obedient servautes,

MCCCCXLV. DE SELVE to PAGET.

Mons^r. Les Ambassadeurs d'Escosse, qui sont depuis peu pardeca, mont adverty quilz ont entendu que le Roy vostre maistre a envoye quelque nombre de gentz de guerre sur ses navires pour faire descente dans le pays d'Escosse, et aller au secours du chasteau de Saint Andre; ce qui seroyt une manifeste ouverture de guerre contre lesdictz Escossoys, et par ainsy contravention a ung article du traicte faict entre les deux Magestes de nos deux maistres, auquel, comme vous scavez, a la requeste du Roy mon maistre, lesdictz Escossoys sont comprins; laquelle comprehension a este par eulx publiee, et acceptee, comme il vous en a este faict foy par lettres patentes dernièrement, que Monseigneur l'Admiral estoyt icy, avec lequel vous accordastes, comme je croy, quil vous souvient de faire semblable publication de ladicte comprehension dans ce Royaulme, et quil pourroyt venir commissayres et depputez du pays d'Escosse avec procuration expresse pour presenter lesdictes lettres patentes d'acceptation de ladicte comprehension. Ausquelz commissayres vous en delivrieres de semblables. Et maintenant que lesdictz commissayres sont par deca soubz vostre saufconduit pour leffect que dessus, et pour l'exécution de ladicte comprehension, ce seroyt soubz correction chose estrange que ledict Seigneur Roy vostre maistre allast publiquement faire guerre contre ledict pays, ou bien vouldist donner faveur par force et par armes aux rebelles dicelluy. Dequoy, Mons^r, il ma semble que mon debvoyr vouloyt que je vous feisse ce mot de remonstrance, comme a lung des principaulx et prudentz ministres, que je congnoysse au tour de la personne du Roy vostre maistre; a la Mageste duquel il me semble que vous pouveres dextremement et a propoz faire entendre ladicte remonstrance, sans que je luy donne donne la peine de mescoutter ou donner audience sur ceste matier. Vous advisant, Mons^r, que je nay pas failly de faire bien entendre ausdictz Ambassadeurs les plaintes qui sont venues pardeca des depredations des Escossoys sur les Angloys, dont ilz sont prestz, a ce quilz disent, de vous satisfaire avec bonne raison, et restitution, sy besoing est, des choses dont lon se plainct, pourveu que lon leur en face autant ; mais disent que lesdictes depredations, quy sont offensez de particuliers delinquantz, ne peuvent donner juste cause d'ouvrir guerre contre tout le pays, ce qui me semble funde en raison, joint que par le dernier traicte, comme vous scaves, le Roy vostre maistre ne doit mouvoyr guerre contre eulx, sinon eu caz de nouvelle occasion donnee. Auquel cas ladicte nouvelle occasion doit estre interpretee selon le traicte de lan 1515, parlequel il ne se trouvera point que les depredations ou injures faictes par particuliers rompent ladicte comprehension, sy lesdictz particuliers ne sont en nombre et assemblee de troys centz ou plus, et que lon ayst denye dans le royaume d'Escosse den faire justice apres due requisition, lequel cas je nay point ouy encores mettre en avant contre eulx. Et en tout evenement me semble que, quand ledict Seigneur Roy vostre maistre pretendroyt luy avoyr este donne nouvelle occasion, quil seroyt convenable a lamytie, que le Roy mon maistre et luy ont ensemble, quil donnast advertissement audict Seigneur Roy mon maistre de ladicte nouvelle occasion, et declairast comme par le moyen dicelle il se pretend quiete de ladicte comprehension, avant que faire armer pour invader hostilement ledict pays d'Escosse. Lesquelles choses, Mons^r, je pense que ledict Seigneur Roy vostre maistre mettra en quelque consideration pour lamytie quil porte au Roy mon maistre, a la mageste duquel pour mon debvoyr il fault que je rende compte de lofficce, que jauray faict en cest affayre, et de la responce que jauray eue la dessus. Me recommandant en cest endroict tresaffectueusement a vostre bonne grace, et priant Dieu, Mons^r, Vous donner bonne et longue vie. De Londres, ce 18 Novembre, 1546.

Vostre affectionne serviteur et amy,

21 Novembris.

AFTER my most harty commendations. Ye shall herwith receyve the copie of my letters of the 14 of this monythe, sent to Master Wotton by thAmbassadour of Fraunce his paket, so to be sent to you. Wher I advertised of the departure of the Duke of Sax from the Lansgrave, I have bene sins surely advertised that he dothe here remayne. Yesterday Secretary Joyse, being at Tilling, cam to visit me, and tolde me that within two days they wold send into Flaunders, and promised to send my letters surely to you, if I wold wright, and towlde me also that the King of Romaynes followithe his victory in Sax, and hathe recovered all suche landes as the Duke of Sax, late Electour, ("now," said he, "Mauritius ys Electour") held of the Crown of Bohemya in feofe, and that Mauritius hathe also gotten a great country of the said late Electours²; the names of townes and the specialties he colde not then tell me. Mary, he said that thEmperour had caused his Ambassadour in England to be advertised of all their newis, to thintent the Kinges Majeste might knowe the same. And, wher I said that the Kinges Majeste wold be glad to here of the good successe of thEmperours affayres, he answered that thEmperour tooke yt so, and had great confidence in the Kinges Majeste and in his amyte, and bore agayn (said he) no les good will and amyte to the Kinges Majeste. "I shuld have tolde you" (quod he) "that thEmperour only
 " in respect of the Kinges Majeste and of his amyte, hathe released tharrest
 " made in Spayne, under caution, according as the request was made par
 " Messeures of his Counsell, and 15 days passed we have written into " Spayne for the same, and have advertised our Ambassadour thcrof, by " whom" (said he) "the Kinges Majeste by this tyme hathe knowlege of the " same." Thus commending the great sincere amite, eche of us for his own master, that thon had towards thother, we departed, &c.

As I can gesse the Secretary Joyse cam to Tilling to speake with thAmbassadour

thAmbassadour of Fraunce, and was with him, who doubtles ys about som practise with thEmperour. Mary, what yt shold be I can in no wise lerne, Fraunce ys more opener then this Courte, yt may chaunce that M^r Wotton may better lerne thear then I can here. Two of the Frenche currours hathe bene here sins Somerset departed hens, and before that in won monythe a currou of Fraunce was here and retourned and cam agayne, (and at every tyme thAmbassadour of Fraunce spake with thEmperour) this makethe me gesse as I do. I advertised by my letters of the 11 day of this monithe, which Mons^r Grandvela promised to send to you, that the said Grandvela said to me that the Frenche King moved certen mariages of streighter aliaunces with thEmperour, "but I assure you" (quod he) "take me pour " ung meschant, if eny further have bene graunted then was when we were " at Bruges." Yf perchaunce ye will aske me why I wright suche a trifle in cyphre, I answer, to accustome my hand therto, when I have leisour, that I may do yt the better at nede. Thus, &c. Tillinge, 21 Novembre, 1546.

Besyde this, with my cyphring I had almost forgotten to tell you, that thies two days hathe thear bene here a great bruyt that the Lantzgrave hathe made meanes to thEmperour for peax, and with a saulf conduyt that he offrithe to comme to thEmperour, and will submitte hym self to thEmperours mercy; or, if thEmperour will not admitte him to his presence, that then yt may please thEmperour tappoynt a place whear he may mete with the Marquys of Brandenburghe and County de Bures, to speke with theym herof. Demaunding of Joyse what this was, he tolde me that by meanes the Lantzgrave had cawsed a frend of Marquies Haunse of Brandenburghe to wright to him to move some meanes for a peax; "but what will herof " followe," said he, "I can not tell; but thEmperour ys in good hope of very " good successe in his affaires, and that" (said he) "ye shall knowe shortly;" and with the same he tolde me that Norling was rendred to thEmperour, and won other small town, but he colde not name yt. I have bene otherwise also advertised that a frende of the said Marquises being in the Lantzgrave his campe, hathe written to him to be a meane to thEmperour for some appointement. ThEmperour continuythe his campe still very nere to the Lantzgrave, about fowr Englishe myles hens.

This 100 yeres hathe not bene sene so good wether in this country this tyme of the yere, (as they say here) yt rainithe sometyme; often tymes ther be fowle mistes, and colde nightes continually, but as yet neither suche accustomed snowe, nor suche frostes as was wont to kill bothe man and beste, being furthe of dores.

SERENISSIME Rex, ac Domine clementissime. In ultimis litteris ad Majestatem Vestram nona hujus mensis datis, scripsi Mauritium Saxonie Ducem hactenus quietum se continuisse, et Bohemos egredi regni sui limina recusasse: tempore autem intermedio longe diversa, et ab ea adgnatione et confœderatione, que inter Electorem Saxonie et Mauritium jam multis annis fuit, ab eorum avis et attavis per manus eis tradita, aliena et indigna commisit: per spetiem enim edictorum et mandatorum Cesaris et Romanorum Regis, communes inter se et Electorem civitates et terras, quemadmodum argenti et æris fodinæ omnes sunt, invasit et occupavit: pergit quoque modo ad ea loca expugnanda, que propria et pecularia alterius sunt, simultatis obedientia et ex interminatis a Cesare sibi pœnis se invitum et coactum hoc facere: et pro ea invasione coloranda litteras sub nova forma ad Electorem, partim bellum hoc excusantes, partim bellum denunciantes (quarum copiam versam ad Majestatem Vestram mitto), dedit. Protestantes omnes ad Mauritium scripserunt ut veteris agnationis et confederationis inter Electoris majores et suos reverentia et necessitudine, tum quoque eorum beneficiorum, quæ ejus Pater et ipse ab Electore acceperunt recordatione, talia hoc tempore conturbatissimo committere nolit, et ab hujuscemodi ceptis desistat, sed, ut fertur, hic in facto a se male cepto pejus pergit; et hoc inprimis hinc evenire puto, is enim ætate admodum juvenis est, et animi longe concitatoris quam sapientis; et primi qui apud eum Consiliarii sunt, Cesaris et Regis studiosiores et observantiores, propter sperata et accepta commoda, quam publici boni sunt; et hujus patris Georgij papisticæ superstitionis reliquias adhucdum indigestas intra se continent. Bohemi quoque in Electoris provinciam, qua Bohemiam contingit, irruerunt, et supra ducentos equites et bis mille pedites Hosserni trucidarunt, quorum magnus numerus in Bohemico exercitu fuit, qua incursione facta reversi sunt, et, ut creditur, in caussam educti sunt, ut spetiosior Mauritio pretextus esset Electoris ditiones invadendi. Electoris ditiones modo omni milite destitutæ sunt, is enim secum Nobilitatem fere omnem et bellicos viros contra Cesarem eduxit. Hec Mauritij defectio ab eo elaborata est, a quo plurium in Germania nobilium virorum animi dolosis promissionibus et quesitis artibus dementati sunt. Nam si omnes Principes, Civitates, et Status, qui religionem amplexi sunt et profitentur, socijs et conjunctis viribus eam tutarentur, Cesari impossibile foret eam expugnare, et cum modo quoque majorem difficultatem pro hac doctrina abolenda et Romano Episcopo in superstitiosam tyrannidem restituendo experiatur, simulat Se nunquam in animum induxisse quod religionem abolere voluerit. Uterque exercitus tam Cesaris quam Protestantium adhuc in campis sunt, et minus Germanici miliarij spatio dissiti sunt, quotidie levia prælia committunt; verum nihil dum memorabile factum est. Cesar admodum cupit in Ducatum Wirtenbergensem suas copias inducere, ut ibi hiberna militi tribuat, verum alteri obnixè reluctantur et repugnant; plurimum enim Protestantibus decederet, hoc Ducatu erepto; is enim omnem fere comitatum tota hac estate exercitui elargitus est. Clerus Coloniensis omnes artes versat et exercet in eorum Episcopo exauthorando, et ipse Episcopus modo ad ipsum Imperatorem, Romanorum Regem, et omnes alios Principes et Status, libellum mittit, in quo causam reddit et reformatæ religionis et Romani Episcopi abolitionis, ac palam profitetur se in suscepta religione, dum vixerit, permansurum. Nisi Deus pro sua clementia his conturbatis et adflictissimis rebus per Germaniam succurrerit, timor est ¹*Imperatorem Episcopum Romæ in totam Germaniam restitutum, et Imperium sibi subjectum*: discordie enim et dissensiones nostre alijs hominibus occasiones prebent ad eorum conatus peragendos; et unde diutius pecunia ¹*Protestantibus* in hoc bellum accessura sit, non video. Ego sub debita fide et observantia Regie Vestre Majestati me supplicem addico et subjicio. Datum Oxonie², vicesima quarta Novembris, anno 46.³

To the Kinges Majestie.

MCCCCXLVIII. WOTTON to PAGET.

SIR, my ductye remembrid. I wrote unto you by a servaunt of myne the 26th of the last moneth⁴, and also agayne the thirde of this present⁴, the which Mons^r lAdmyrall promysid me shulde be sent the nexte daye after in

² See note to p. 343.

diligence into England. I truste you have receyvid all. ¹*Longueval* is not yet retournid to the Courte. Neverthelesse La Planche hath been with me sith, to whome I declarid parte of your mynde; who no doubt hath declarid it to the said Longueval. And at that tyme the said La Planche shewid me that he oughte to knowe, as well what was doon in the matter betwixte the King his maister and the Protestantes, as an other; for he hymself had been sent to theim for the matter, and that the matter was not so farre fourthe, as it seemid that you tooke it to be, and that owte of doubt it were not the Protestantes that cowde ynduce the King his maister to renunce the Bishop of Rome, nor no manne cowde doo it but the Kinges Majestie; without whose auctoritie they, that shulde woorke to bringe this matter abowte, thinke they shall doo no good in it. Sith that tyme, I have spoken with the Cardinal Belay, whose name yf I shall neede to write in cyfre, I entende to wryte thus, —O—, or thus, ; who made a longe tale of the good affection that he beareth to the Kinges Majestie and to the contynuaunce of this amitye; wherein he wolde travaile as muche as enye manne, and thoughte that now was the tyme come that meanes mighte be founden that they shulde be knytte yet in a streighter amitye then they were. For the Protestantes have nowe neede of helpe, and have requyrid to make a leage with the King his maister; Who hath made theim a playne answer, that He will entre in none with theym, unlesse the Kinges Majestie wolde doo the lyke; but yf the Kinges Majestie wolde, then was He content to doo it to. And he thoughte that the Kinges Majestie making this leage with the King his maister and the Protestantes, they shulde all be so stronge, that they nedid not to feare enye other forces. And besides that, now is the mater of religion yn questyon, and in that estate that, unlesse the Protestantes be succourid, he sayeth that actum est de negocio Evangelij, for it is not possible that the Protestantes beare the burden enye lengar. So that this manne goith not directelye to the rejecting of the Bishop of Rome, but he sayeth that that shall necessarelye folowe of this leage; wherof he shewith hymself muche desyrouse. Wherunto I sayed that as for his good wille towards the King my maister, His Majeste knewe it well to be so, and so had declarid unto me. And as for the leage that he spake of, yf the King his maister had made that answe, by lykelyhode He wolde advertise the King my maister of it. And then I doubtid not but that they wolde doo therein that were moste expedyent. We had longe comunicacion of this matter; and, emonge other thinges, where I said to hym that, yf the Protestantes cowde have been contentid with reason, peradventure they mighte have been in leage with us, er this. “ Marye, it is true,” quod he, “ but to speake frankelye with you, they durste not for feare of us ; for “ yf they had so doon withoute us, we threatenid to be agayne them to ; and “ then they, being lothe to refuse directelye your amitye, didde demaunde “ suche thinges of you, as they knewe you wolde not graunte unto.” But fynallye the manne in his comunicacion shewith hymself verye earnestlye myndid to the setting fourthe of the Gospell, and to take greate thought, what ende these maters of Germanye will take.

I have receyvid a letter from my Lord Cobham, Sir Thomas Seymour, and my brother, declaring theyr procedinges in theyr commission. Saint Germain, oone of the Frenche Commissioners, is comme hither to the Courte, and, as I heere saye, reportith that our Commissioners are so wilfulle and unreasonable, that he lookith for no good to be doone in the mater ; and therfore he sayeth he will retourne thither no more, and will advise his maister to revoke the reste to. When I was last at the Courte they spake nothing to me of it. Yf they doo, I have nowe summe knowledge of the matter by the said letters, wherby I maye make them summe answer.

ThEmperour departid from Brentz by Ulme, and wente to Tillingen. I sawe a letter from Strazzeburth, that seemid to make of the said departinge a maner of a fleeng awaye ; as though thEmperour durste have taryed there no lenger. And the said letter sayed also that menne and beastes died a pace in thEmperours campe, and that the Protestantes didde not folowe nor sette upon thEmperours menne at theyr departure, for feare of embusshemens, the which Spaignardes and Italyens use muche. ThEmperours Ambassadour speakith otherwyse of these maters : and forbycause you shall the better perceyve what that syde sayeth, I have sent you herwith a cotype of a letter sent to the said Ambassadour from the Byshop of Arras his nepveu¹ ; for thAmbas-

testantes campe departid all redye, and other sixe thowsande have offerid to comme to thEmperours service.

That the townes of Auspurgh and Ulme ar in greate feare, and have muche trouble and busynesse emonge themselves.

That the noblemenne of Spayne have sent sixe hundred thowsande ducates, of theyr owne liberalyte, to thEmperour towardses the charges of this warre; the which money is at Genua all redye.

That certayne fresshe horsemenne of Naples and Hungarye ar redye to joyne with thEmperour.

That thEmperour seekith all the meanes He can to bringe the Protestantes to the batayle, but that they keepe theyr forte styлле.

That fyve hundred Spaynardes, footemen, arcabusiers, of late overthrewe a greate scorte of horsemenne of the Protestantes, that conductid a greate nombre of wagons laden with vytaylles and municions, the which greate preye the said Spaignardes brought to theyr campe, withowte that the Protestantes cowde ever reskue it.

That they have vytayles and all necessaryes good chepe in thEmperours campe.

That, if the warre contynuid, thEmperour had sent for two thowsande Spaignardes more.

That thEmperours Almaynes have promysid Hym not to departe owte of the campe, tyll the Protestantes dissolve theyr armye, and 15 dayes after.

The Conte Palatyn preparith to goo to thEmperour, as thEmperours Ambassadour sayth, to reconsyle hym to Hym.

Hit is owte of all doubte (for therof the Frenche King hath certayne letters to) that Duke Moryce hath declarid hymself for thEmperour, agaynst his cousyn Hanse Frederyke the Duke Electour. And what exploictes the said Duke Morice and tharmye of the Boemyens have made all redye in Saxonye shall appere unto you by the cople of a parte of the saide laste letter, that the Bysshop of Arras sent to thAmbassadour; the which you shall also receyve herewyth.¹ And where as in the later ende of the said cople is sayed that Duke Morice was beating of a towne; when the said Ambassadour tolde the Frenche King the newes, the King answerid that He had certayne newes that Duke Moryce had taken the towne. When the tydinges of these exploictes camme to thEmperours armye, all thordinaunce thoroughe oute the campe was dischargid for the glad tydinges sake. Duke Morice in hys defyançe protestith that he movith not this warre against his cosyn for the religyon sake; for, yf thEmperour did warre in that querele, he protestith that he wolde lyve and dye for the Gospell.

As farre as I can perceyve, the pretense of this warre made by the Boemyens agaynst thElectour of Saxe, is for certayne thinges usurpid by the said Electour, the which the Boemyens saye apperteynith to theim; and as I take it, it is for an abbaye.

ThEmperours Ambassadour shewith me that the French King borrowid of late more money of the Bankers of Lyons, and hath not yet payed his olde debtes there.

They have a tale heere in the Courte that the Kinges Majestie sendith succour unto the Scottes, besiegid by the Governour in Saint Andrewes.

As for Capitayne Bua, the Albanois taken at Turin, sentence was given agayne hym, and executid uppon hym, a fortnight at the leaste before the letter was datid that was sent me to speake for hym. They telle me that he ranne awaye with greate summes of money of his capitayne, the which money his capitayne was fayne to paye to the Kinge. And his capitayne hath cawsyd hym to be taken, and made the processe agayne hym; and that the said Bua never sayed that he was the Kinges Hieghnes servaunt. He sayed well that he had servid Hym, but was clerelye dismissid of Hym, and offerid to serve yn Italye. ThAdmyrall sayed unto me, and the Cardinall of Turnon confyrmid the same (and yet have I mucche a doo to beleeve it) that Bua, being in the Kinges Majesties service, offerid to retourne to the French King agayne with all his men, but that the French King sayed that He wolde truste none suche; but surelye it was well to be thoughte that suche a manne taken shulde have lytle favour and shorte expedicion yn this processe; and so God have mercye on his sowle.

You shall receyve also herewith a letter from thEmbassadour at Venys¹, that hath been longe a comminge, as it apperith, by the letter that was written to me. And thus Jesus preserve you longe in helth and prosperite. Written at Chauny, the 28th daye of November, 1546.

Yours ever to commaunde,

MCCCCXLIX. WOTTON to PAGET.

SIR, my duetye remembrid. Whereas I wrote to you of late that thEmperours Ambassadour had newes that the Conte Palatyn preparid to go to thEmperour; when the said Ambassadour declarid those newes to the Frenche King, He made answere, that a gentleman of his came streighte from the said Palatyn, and that he lefte hym syke, and in that taking, that Phisiciens utterlye despayrid of his lyfe. He tolde thAmbassadour also, that there shulde have been a meeting of menye Prynces or theyr Ambassadors, for to make summe agreement betwixte the King of Denemarke, and the said Conte Palatyn, and that the said Palatyn had requyrid Hym, the Frenche King, to sende summe man of authorite of his thither to be present at it. You shall receyve herewith a cotype of a letter sent from King Ferdinand to thEmpereur¹, declaring sumwhat more perfytye parte of the newes that I wrote you laste.

The Baron de la Garde camme in poste to the Courte, where he taryed not passid oon daye or two, and is retournid backe agayne towards Amyens, and those frontiers, as I suppose to procede forewarde in his commission.

The Cardynall Farnese retourning into Italye, menye Italyens departid also from thEmperours campe; and more peraventure wolde, yf it were not for the sharpe punyshement that is usid uppon them that so departe, when they ar taken.

You shall receyve herewith a cotype of a proclamacion made of late in this Courte²; I mervayle to what intent. This cotype is not so truelye written as I wolde wisse it to be, but I can gette no better now; but, as farre as I can perceyve by it, yf eny Englishe manne or other strangier, not

MCCCCL. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to WOTTON.¹

M^R WOTTON. After our right harty commendations, thies shalbe to signefie unto you that lately arryved here out of Scotland as Ambassadors from thens M^r Davy Panter, Elect of Ross, and Sir Adam Otterburne Knight; who, having accesse to the Kinges Majesties presence, after declaration of their charge to present thacceptation of the peax, with request of the semblable to be had from us, were referred to us of the Counsaill further to commen and conferre with them uppon the pointes of the same. And theruppon an assemblée was appointed; whereunto, as the French Ambassadeur, alledging the King his maister to have been a worker in it, made meane to be present, (which was accorded) so it was thought convenyent, for that thEmperour was also a partie to the matyer, beyng enemy to the Scottes for our sake, his Ambassadeur shuld be at the same assemblée. And thus beeng all mett together, the French Ambassadeur beganne to propone the cause of the commeng of the sayd Scottishe Ambassadors, as before, with addition howe his maister, as a worker for them, had comprehended them, and that he being his Ambassadeur could not otherwise discharge his office, then to set furth this matter, which theyr Admyral havyng begonne at his beyng here, gave hym charge to poursew the same. And theruppon the Scottes beganne talledge the comprehension, and that conforme to the same and meanes made unto them by two or three several gentlemen purposely sent out of Fraunce, they cam toffre at thinstance of the French Kinge, the ratification therof on their partie, and desired to receive the lyke at our handes, or eles to here what we would say. For thaunswer wherof we replyed, that in the tyme of our late treatie with the French Commissioners, we made difficultie to passe any comprehension for them, alledging amonges other thinges our treatie with thEmperour; at which tyme it was declared, and constantly, as you know, by thAdmyral, that the Viceroy and Granvele, though not in writeng yet by wordes, had been contented on thEmperours behaulf to comprehend them, and that thEmperour shuld also afterward by his oune mouth confirme the same to Monluc at his beeng with Him. Nowe, bicause Grandvele and other thEmperours ministres deny any such comprehension, to thintent we might aswell kepe our treatie with thEmperour, as also take our commoditie for their not observing their pactes and covenantes made with us, we have not condescended so farre, as to graunte them any such comprehension; which, as you knowe, was so couched, and with so large a scope for us, (as appereth by these woordes sine prejudicio tractatuum, wherby if any of our treaties, eyther with the Scottes, Emperour, or any other, shuld be touched by the comprehension, the same must take non effect) as besides thadvantage that may be taken therby, they have, by expresse wordes in the same, lost their helpe, by gyveing newe occasion, which they have done, by entrec uppon our mayne grounde with a power of men of warre, spoileng our peple, burning oure villages, and takeng of our people and rawnsomed them, besides theyr contynual warre uppon the se, not by any pryvate men, but by the shippes royall, the Mary Willoughby, and the Lyon &c beyng sent to the see by common authoritie. And yet finally it was sayed unto them, that His Majestie, beeng the Prince, who of others sought the good and quiet of peax for the tranquillitie of Christendom, might be induced, according to the goodnes of his nature, to harken to any reasonable offres and condicions. And this is moch of theeffect of our conference; which by His Majesties commaundement we signefie by thies letters, to thende you might be ripe to speake in the matier, as you shall have cause ministred by the French King or any of his Counsail accordingly.

SIR, my duetye remembrid. ThEmperours Ambassadour hath sent me this evening a letter to rede, which was sent hym this daye from the Frenche Queenes Maistre dHostel, by the which he wrote, that the said Queene had commaundid hym to wryte to the said Ambassadour, that the Frenche King had sent Her worde this daye, that He had receyved letters of the 24th of the last moneth, that the Protestantes had broken upp theyr campe, and that the Duke of Saxe had taken with hym 10 or 12 thowsande footemen and certayn horsemen to go succour his countrey; and the Duke of Wirtenberghes men were gonne home to defende theyr owne countrey; and that the Landgrave went abowte to furnissh the townes of theyr leage with garysons, yf he cowde; and that thEmperour pursued the Protestantes, but that they went fyve greate Duche leages before Hym.

You shall receyve herewith a cotype of a letter¹ sent me from certayne of our marchandemen being at Bourdeaulx, the which letter oone of theym brought me: whome I dare not sende to the Courte to sollicyte this matter, for the proclamacion made of late in this Courte, the cotype wherof I have sent you with a packet, which the Secretarye De Laubespine hath promised shalbe sent you with speede; for he deliverid it streight to a gentleman, that came of late from the Frenche Ambassadour in England, and retournith streight thither agayne, as the said De Laubespine sayeth. ¹ It was addressed to Wotton from Bourdeaux on the 17th of November by five merchants, one of York, two of Kingston upon Hull, and two of Bristol, who complained that they, with divers other English merchants, were arrested on the 18th of October, with all their merchandize to the value of 4000 crowns, by virtue of letters of mark granted by the King of France's Court sixteen months before, during the war; that they had applied to the King of Navarre, being the King's Lieutenant of Gascony and Guienne, to be released, but were by Him referred to the high Court.

Henry VIII. directed the Council to talk with the French Ambassador on the subject of the arrest, and also of the proclamation, mentioned in note p. 359, and alluded to in the text. Vol. I. p. 887.

MCCCCLIII. HARVEL to KING HENRY VIII.¹

Most Sacred Mageste.

IT may please Your Highnes to be advertisid, that the Turke departid from Constantinople the 18 of October towards Andrinopoly, wher he wil winter; and by constant fame it is affermid that he makith grete preparacions ayenst the sommer folowing; and, acording to his acostomid solemnitye, when he goith to the warre, tofor his departing from Constantinople, hath made grete almes, withe soche other semblable cerimonies, as he usith to do. Doctor Girardo, thEmperoures Ambasatour, had not begon to negocye with the Turke, by inpediment of his sikenes. The trewis betwen Ferdinando and the Turke exspirith by al Marche, as it is raportid.

Ther passid her of late a gentilman of the French Kinges sent to the Turke in grete diligence. Her is at the present Piero Stroci and the Signor of the Mirandula; occupied, as many thinkith, abowt certaine differences with the Countye Piero Maria of Sansecondo, concerning batail between them: but many suspectith the said personages to be her for affayres of the French King.

Thes dais passid, the Cardinals of Trent and Fernesy, with Don Diego, wer her only 4 or 5 dais, a solace, withowt any other negocye, as farre as I cowde lerne by inquisicion; and the said Fernesy departid towards Plaisance, and the other retornid to Trent.

By sondry raportes from Rome, it is brutid that the Bushop recusith to contribute any more with thEmperour in the present warre of Germany, except the French King entrid in ther lige, as it is thowght the Bushop temptith by al meanis to unite those two Princes together.

The raportes from Germanye are moche variable; but the most certaine semith to be, that both tharmies are obstinatly bent to continew in the felde, and eche of them laborith to wery owt the other. It is brutid that thEmperour hath lost in this warre by armes, cold, hungar, and sikenes abowt 15000 soldates.

Ther hath ben mention of practises of peace between thEmperour and the Protestantes by the meane of the Countye Palatin and the Contye of Beury. Many strange rumoures hath ben spred of the Duke Mauricio of Saxonye to have invadid thElectoures state, and to have taken part with thEmperour and Ferdinando; to the wich is given no credit. The Bushop intendith to make 10 new Cardinals¹, and the most part for monye.

Thus God preserve Your Regal Mageste in most prosperous helth, joye, and felicite. From Venice, the 6th of December, 1546.

MCCCCLIV. WOTTON to PAGET.

Syr, my duetye remembrid. You shall receyve herewyth the copenes of fowre letters sent me fro my Lord of Westminster², with an other letter and packet unto you, the which I suppose commith from M^r Joan Bernardync, that is with my Lord of Westminster. He that brought me those letters is oone

² Thirlby's four letters are dated the 25th, 27th, and 28th of November from Dillingen, and were all conveyed by the Frenchman named in the text. The substance of the information contained in them is that when the Landgrave broke up his encampment, the Emperor followed him through the night, but the next day returned to his own camp; from whence He moved towards Norlingen, and finally took that town. The Landgrave's movements were uncertain.

Mons^r de Pockere, a gentleman of the Frenche Kinges, that hath been all this whyle in the Emperours campe, sent thither purposelye from the King his maister to enquire the newes there. He commyth now from the said campe, savinge that he commith by the Lowe Cuntreys and the Queene Regentes Courte. He dothe not saye that the Protestantes have dissolvid theyr campe, but that a greate number of theym lye yn the Duchye of Wirtenbergh togyther, pour faire teste agaynst thEmperours armye, yf He go abowte to entre that waye. But yt seemith to me that what name so ever be given to the thinge, yet it is so, that the Protestantes ar leasers by the withdrawinge of theyr armye. For, as long as they laye joyning to thEmperours armye, thEmperour cowde not take Noerlingen, the whiche now He hathe. And thoughe the Prynces, as the Duke of Wirtenbergh, the Duke of Saxe, and suche other, have greate compenyes with theym, yet diverse townes of the Protestantes ar in dangier, as Halle, by the said Pockeres sayeng, and peradventure Auspurgh and Ulme, thoughe he thinke not so. The said Pockere sayeth that King Ferdinandes menne ar retournyd agayne home owte of Saxonye, havinge taken that thinge that they camme for; the which was no greate thinge, savinge that Duke Moryce hath reteynid with hym the horsemen, Hungaryens, and certayne other.

And where as I wrote to you of late that, when thEmperours Ambasadour heere sayed to the Frenche King, that the Conte Palatyn was goinge to thEmperour, the King answerid hym agayne that he was so syke that hys physytions dispayrid of hys lyfe; Mons^r de Pockere sayeth that the bruyte not onelye of hys sykenes, but of hys deathe, was in thEmperours campe; but that of a truethe it is not so, but the said Palatyn is goinge yn deede to thEmperour. He sayeth also that a lytle before the Protestantes withdrewe theyr armye, they passid by thEmperours campe, as yt were in a maner provokinge Hym to the batayle. And then came Mons^r de Bure unto thEmperour, and sayed, "Sir, nowe ys the tyme, yf You will fighte this daye, and lette me leade the vawarde, You shalbe assurid to have peace as longe as You lyve." Whereunto thEmperour made a Spanyshe answer, sayeng that was a thinge unpossyble; the whiche answer was taken yn that parte, as thoughe He shulde meane by yt that yt were not possyble for Hym to lyve yn peace, thoughe He had overcommē the Protestantes.

Sir, I have receyvid your letter of the fyrste of this present. Heere is moche speakinge of the succour that you have sent, and entende to sende, in to Scotlande. I praye God you maye fynde the Scottes that are with you so conformable, that we have no newe warre with theym, and with these men agayne;

MCCCCLV. THIRLBY to PAGET.¹

AFTER my most hartie commendations to you. The 25, 27, and 28 of Novembre, I wrote to M^r Wotton by Mons^r de Pockere, a gentillman of the Frenche Kinges, who departed hens upon the bruyt of the Lansgraves and the Duke of Sax their goinge a way from their army, so that ye myght here some thinge from me that wayes; the copie of whiche letters ye shall herewith receyve. Sins the rendringe of Neorlinge, Dingelspill, won other franke towne, was immediatly rendred, and 2 or 3 gentilmens castels nere herabought; after that, Rotinburgh; and, as Mons^r Grandevela tolde me, Hale, won other fre cytie also. He said that the Countie Palatine commyth to thEmperour to desyre pardon, and that the Duke of Wirtinburgh hathe also made meanes for grace to thEmperour, but thEmperour hathe refusid, onles he will submytte hym sylfe and his state to thEmperours plesure. Of suche newis as comme from the campe ye shall perceyve by Segnior Barnardine his letters to me, whiche herewith ye shall receyve. They say here, that we shall not ceasse turmoylinge from place to place thorough this daungerous countrey all this winter, for thEmperour will do what He can to bringe his matters to his purpose before the springe of the yere. Apon the rendringe of Neorlinge the Cardinall of August, beinge appointed to the governaunce of the same, wrote to all thAmbassadors that were in Tillinge, after suche a forme as ye shall se by his letters to me. I sawe the letters to the Frenche Ambassadour, and they differed not from myn, but that they were in the Frenche tonge and myn in the Italien; where I sent M^r Barnardyne thider and entendid to folowe the day after his departure. That purpose was broken, for suche causes as ye shall se in Barnardine his letter to me sent from Ncorlinge, whiche I send to you herwith, and a copie also of an extracte of 2 letters shewed to me by thAmbassadour of Venyce.¹

The 7th of this monythe thAmbassadour of Fraunce departed towardes the campe, to have audience of thEmperour. Grandvela tolde me the day before that the said Ambassadour had sent to the campe for audience "for a great matter" (quod he) "as thEmbassadour saith, but what it ys, I knowe not," said Grandvela. This signifieth to me that their is some practise; but to tell you my fonde judgement (wherin I may be deceyved) I thinke that the Frenche Kinge, to entertayne thEmperour, to what purpose God knowthe, makith offers and motions; but to conclude eny matter of great importaunce I thinke that He wolde use an other mynistrer then his Ambassadour here resident; yet I say I may be deceyved. What Grandvela tolde me touchinge this, I advertised you by my letters of the 11th of Novembre.

As I was wrightinge this I receyved M^r Barnardynes letters from the

"Copie. The 29 of Novembre Tinglespill rendrid, where thEmperour with all the Courte lodgid the same night, and 2 enseignes of Madruches, the next morning the citadins did present themselves to thEmperour, desiring pardon of their fawltes hetofore committed, and that thEmperour gave them so good an answer, that they retournid very mery. The same morning departid the campe to Nola verso Wirtinberg, where was the Lantzgrave and Duke of Sax with 8000 fotemen and 2000 horsemen, who (as it seemid) wold there entre the lande of Wirtenberg, callid thither by the Duke, impaurito of thEmperour armye. And that thEmperour yesterday did delyberat by his Cownsell to folow the Lantzgrave per consumendum in ogni modo.

"Of letters from Rothenburg, of the 4 of December.

"Copie. The 3 of this present thEmperour entred Rothenburg, that is 2 Italiens myles compassse or abowte, indifferent fayre and ryche, was rencontrid by the Lordes of the towne, and browte in at 32 of the clocke sotto un baldachyn of yellow taffata, with an exceding contentement of those peple. This Rothenburge is a passaige that thEmperour did procure to gette for to lette thennemys to entre alli Stati di quelli Veschovi et altri amici nel stato della Franchonia, et li e riuscito molto meglio di quello che sipensava. Also the Lantzgrave and Duke of Sax is six leages of, and is thought woll departe from thens with only their Cowrtes, for that they have not money to susteyn 7000 fotemen and 2000 horsemen, that they have with them there. Moreover that that the said Lantzgrave and Duke of Saxe had alrede dyned twyse with the Conte Palatyn, who is lookid for heere withyn these 2 dayes (as it is said per vocce commune), and that thEmperour had dispechid Doctor Naves to the said Conte. It was tolde me that ther was a man of Duke of Wirtenberg per offerir il Signor suo devoto di Sua Maesta per la gratio del qual procura il Duco di Baviera suo cognato. And that the campe shulde rest there 4 dayes, and after shuld marche chi dicce alla volta di Spira, chi nel Stato di Vertinberg."

Thirlby adds in his own hand "Theis letters were written from a frende of thAmbassadour of Venyce."

campe, whiche ye shall herwith receyve. Because he hathe desyred to retourne into Englonde, and that he wright to me of this occasion, I have thought good to make this dispeache by hym, and to sende you divers copies of my letters hertofore written to you, the docket of all whiche copies herwith I sende to you.¹

I truste that Somerset be saufely retourned to you, wherof I wolde be gladde to here, by whome I advertised the Kinges Majestie of thEmperours answer to that I declared to Hym on the Kinges Highnes behalfe, and did sende to you the story of all thinges here till then passed, scripture Latine, Anglice, Italice, et Barbare. I sent you also suche letters as were founde in Newborough castell, with myn other bablinges. Ye shall herwith receyve a letter sent to me from thAmbassadour of Venice, touchinge Grandvela his departinge from Lawingen, wherof the said Grandvela sent me worde over nyght, 2 houres within night, that he wolde departe the next morninge erly, and advised me to tary ther I was, tyll he advertised me further of thEmperours plesure; and likewise he sent to the Frenche Ambassadour, who the next morninge met with Grandvela to go in his companye to Neorlinge, and therfore Grandvela chafed, as my man tolde me, whome I sent to go with him to make me lodginge at Norlinge, and to signifie to hym that I wolde not tary behinde alone; and so folowed the next day, with as good company and guydes as I coulde get, for daunger of the paysautes, who, spoyled and burnt, be in a great rage, and hathe slayne a great nombre of suche as travaylith by them, beinge not stronge enough for them. I have therfore gently desyred Grandvela to have knowledge of his departure hens, that I may go in his companye, whyche he hathe promysed to gyve me.

Ye shall at good length perceyve by Barnardyne, what hathe here passed, who, as he hathe diligently noted, so he can as certainly advertise you, as I can wright. He hathe prepared to make his owne charges whomwarde, whiche I leave to you there to recompence. I assure you I had never so moche a do, as I nowe have, to get mony to beare my charges; all thinges be deare, and mony harde to comme by, and dear to. Thus I make an ende of wrightinge, leavyng the reste to M^r Barnardine his reporte, and hartely I bid you fare weall. From Neorlinge, the 7th of Decembre, 1546.

Yo^r assurid lovinge frende,

THO^MS WESTM^Y.

¹ None other of the various letters, &c. transmitted by the above despatch, except the two printed in the preceding page, now accompany it.

Sins the wrightinge herof I harde that Hale was not rendred, and that thEmperour wilbe there this night, and take yt perforce, if they rendre not. By that M^r Barnardyne shall receyve theis letters and departe, I thinke he shall bringe you the certenty herof, and moche more.

MCCCCLVII. THIRLBY to PAGET.²

AFTER my most hartye commendacions to you. Being advertesid from M^r Barnardyn of the good occasion he had to passe in the company of Mons^r de Bures thourough Germany, I dispechid him, that the Kinges Majestie might be certenly advertesid of our occurrentes here. Apon the tyme of his departure Mons^r de Grandvele departid from Nerlinge, two leages of, to speake with the Conte Palatyn; who, making sute to speke with thEmperour, was remitted to him, and thre dayes after that thEmperour departid from Rotenburgh to Hale, and arryved there the 16 day of this monithe at night, and the daye after cam thither the said Conte Palatyne, it is thought not only to make his one peax, but to be a meane in the submission of others. Mons^r Granvele, in whose company I cam hither from Erelsham, tolde me in the way that the Duke of Wirtenburgh had written that he wold submyt him

selfe to thEmperours marcy, "but" (said he) "thEmperour is sore offendid
 " with him, for that He had pardonyd him before for lyke faulte, and yet now
 " he was one of the great solliciters to cawse theis cyties to rebelle; but"
 (said he) "ye shall se shortely a good effecte of theis thinges." "Mary," (quod I) "if I wer able to gyve thEmperour cownsell, I wold advyse Him to " use his clemensy, to thintent He might the soner compounde theis matters,
 " les suche as wold Him yvell, might, apou these bruleries, take occasion at " this next springe to make His Majestie more busines, and so the more to " animate theis men." And apou this I toke occasion to aske him, if he hard eny thing that the Frenche King was taking uppe Swissers. "Ye, ye," (said he) "and wolde leade practises, if He colde, but the Kinges Majeste your " master shal clerly perceyve that thEmperour is his suer frende." When I perceyved that I had none other but this generall answer, I toke occasion to talke with Mons^r d'Arras, who was in that company, and said, "What! will
 " theis Frenchemen to warre agayne, that they take uppe Swishers?" "Yt
 " is lyke inough" (said he) "for they be irrequieto animo." "Then," said
 I, "yt must be either against you, or us, for I know not the thirde; and we"
 (quod I) "be in peax with them." "And so be we," said he, "and besides " that, they dayly maine with us not only contynuaunce of amytie, but also
 " a straighter amytie; they have moreover assertenid us that the Frenche
 " King myndithe nothing ageynst us by the gathering of theis men." "So He " did," (quod I) "when He cam to Parpynan." "We be therfor," said he,
 "apou our gardes; and I thinke," (quod he) "if theis matters had not well
 " succedid to thEmperour, He might perchaunce have attemptid some thing
 " against us; but, now the case changid, it maye be that He will torne yt
 " an other wayes." This was theeffecte of our communication touching theis matters. I can not certainly lerne, but by a bruyte in this Cowrte, that the Frenche King dothe amasse eny Suysshers, but it is good according to the cownsell of the Gospell ut vigiletis, quod nescitur qua hora fur venturus est.
 Ther was a great bruyt here also, that we wer broken with France and in warre; and that ye know aswell, as all those that talkith here.

The 17 day of this monithe Mons^r Skipperus cam to visite me at my lodging, who (as he tolde me) cam thorough Germany, and the cawse of his journey was to lerne, whither that bruyte was true that they hard in Flanders, viz. that the Frenche King shuld make men abowte the Ryne. He tolde me that he fownde yt true, that men wer taken uppe there, and shuld mouster abowte Lorreyne; "and" (said he) "becawse we have all the doinges of the " Frenchemen suspecte, we have also men in aredynesse, and have warned
 " our neighbors of Lorayne to be apou their gardes." He said further to me,

me, that he wold be open and playne to me in a thing that he lernyd by the waye as he now cam, that ther shuld be one that had great accesse, and often, to Strawsebourgh, and to the Protestantes campe, and some tyme to thEmperours, "who, as he passithe," (said he) "spekithe very yvell of " thEmperour, and muche in the favor of the Protestantes; and as he shuld go downe the Ryne, one, that shuld here him speke thus liberally, askid him how he cold passe withowt danger from thone to thother. "Yes," quod the man, "I have a thing here, that servith me at neede," and drue owte of his purse a skotshen of the Kinges Majestes armes; "and likewise" (said he) "I hard of one other that shuld do the like with the Frenche Kinges armes, "or yf yt be all one man," (quod he) "I can not perfectly telle, but "becawse," quod he, "spies might thus abuse other Princes armes, there is "ordre taken that suche, when they shall passe in suche maner, shalbe "stayed tyll they be knowen what they be." I said agayne to him, that an officer of armes of the Kinges Majesties cam to me, (thEmperour being at Lawengen) who cam to Germanye, and was in the Lantzgraves campe, as I therof advertesed thEmperour, who also retournid by Germany, and caryed with him thEmperours letters to the Regent; "if he shuld misseuse his talke "by the waye, the Kinges Majestic, my master," (quod I) "will not be "pleasid therwith." "No, no," (said he) "I thinke it was not he; I "remembre him," quod he, "the Quene had her letters; but this I tell "you," quod he, "that we fere les there shuld be some other, not the Kinges "Majesties servaunt, that wold thus abuse His Majesties armes." Skipperus tolde me also that he shuld here that the Lantzgrave shuld be gone into France with 10 horse; "but" (quod he) "I have not tolde thEmperour this, "for that I have yet no certeyn knowledge herof. Mary," said he, "I go to "visite the Conte Palatyne who hath a servaunt here with him, father to the "capitan of a towne, wherby the Lantzgrave shuld passe, and by him I "thinke" (said he) "to know the truthe." Here is meny postes, that commithe from the Duke of Wirtenburgh to thEmperour, as we here say, to submitte him to thEmperour; but yet the Duke of Alva marched the 18th day of this present monithe with tharmye towards the countrey of Wirtenbergh, towards a towne Imperiall called Haltbrun, in the way to Spires.

This morning I sent Honnynges to Mons^r dEake to telle him, in recompense of his newis, that the Frenchemen had payed the Kinges Majestic his pencion dewe at Novembre last, and my messinger tolde him that, if the Frenche men wer mynded to make us warre, they wer madde to gyve us monye. Wherto he said that the fynenesse of the Frenchemen was suche, that they wold gyve a thowsande to wynde a myllion. And Secretary Joyse being by, said, that of truthe he was advertesid suerly that they made men; "and for whome shuld it be?" said he; "they make us beleve that it is not for us." So, as farre as I can gather, theis men here wold have us take it that it shuld be for us: vigilate therfor, therin can be no hurte, the beste will save it self.

Secondly, I cawsed to be advertesid to Mons^r dEake that they talked in France that Gerard, that was gone to the Turke, had no good answer at him, and that the Turke wold suerly this nexte yere make warre in Hungarye. To that the Secretary Joyse answerid, "we know no suche thinges; and ye see," quod he, "how we go fourthe now dayly with our victory, and shortly ye shall see more."

Then Mons^r dEake askid whither I did not sende into Englande. My messenger said that he knew not. "Yf he do, I pray him" (quod he) "to sende theis my letters with his; in case he do not, lette him sende me his letters with myne enclosid in them, and I will sende them to Spires, so to be sente fourthe." Therfore I have herwith sent you his letters, which I pray you to cawse to be delyvered.

We talke here that thEmperour will folow, to morowe, his armye into the landes of Wirtenbergh, if his gowte lette Him not, wherwith He is now sore trobled in his handes. Some thinket that we shall to Spires, to conclude, if it may be, theis troubles of Garmanye.

Herby past yesterday a brave company of Italians latly comme from Naples; they be counted 300 men of armes, they be marched forward with the rest. Because of haste, I had written theis letters so yvell, that I fered les that ye could not reade them, I caused Honynges to wright them ageyne, whiles I did exercise my hande in cyphering a fewe lynes¹, which ye shall

I prayed him, if he knew any breache betwixt us, tadvertise me thereof, that I might be as sory therefore, as I doubted not butt he was, knowinge the great rejoyse he made wyth me at the peax, and the declaracion at all tymes of his greate desire for the contynuaunce thereof. MCCCCLVIII. WOTTON to PAGET.

SIR, my duetye remembrid. Where I wrote to you of late that certayn of our merchantmenne were arrested at Bordeaulx, by vertu of letters of merc grauntid yn these laste warres against certeyn other Englisshemenne: yf you thinke yt meete to know, what hath been done heere theryn, you shall receyve heerewith a cople of the decree given by the Frenche King there-uppon.¹

ThEmperours Ambassadour shewid me of late the cople of certeyn advyses that he had, the which neverthesse seemid not even verye fresshe, the which were that the Switzers, that calle theym selves Evangelicall, sent to the other, that calle theym selves Catholike, requyringe theym that either they wolde joyne with theym yn defence of the Protestantes agaynst thEmperour, or at the least yn cace thEmperour didde dreeve the Protestantes to enye inconvenyence, that they wolde promesse then to assiste and ayde the said Protestantes. The which thinge the sayde Catholikes refusid to doo; and requyrid thEvangelicalles to remembre and stande to that that was before tymes agreede betuixte theym bothe at commen Diette, that they shulde all tarye at home, and sende none owte. The sayde Evangelicalles requyrid also that the Catholikes shulde not suffre the Bisshop of Roomes Nunce to contynue there enye lenger, but to cause hym to departe thence. The which also the sayde Catholikes refusid to doo. Wheruppon the sayde

It is dated at Folambray, the 10th of December.

Evangelicalles have callid secretelye and sodaynelye a Diette emonges theym selves; and it is unknowne what they have there donne, saving that they have chosen 18 of the hole nombre, to whome they have committid fulle authorite, and the hole power to doo theryn what they shall thinke meete.

These newes, when I redde theym, smellid, me thoughte, as though thEmperours Ambassadour had had theym of the Bisshop of Roomes Nunce. Yn this packet is enclosid an other packet to the Secretarye of Venize, the which I requyre you that some oone of your servauntes may take the paynes to delyver. There is also an other packet to M^r Nicasius, sent as I take it from M^r Bernardino.

There is a gentlemanne come yn poste even nowe from the Frenche Ambassadour yn England, and an other currouer cumme thence lykewyse, who make greate exclamacions yn the Cowrte heere of theyr unkynde handeling at Dover, sayeng that they have been serchid to the skynne, and the money, that they had broughte with theym for theyr journey and necessarye expenses, taken from theym.

I heere no certayne newes owte of Germanye. Yet it ys sayde heere that thEmperour hath sent Mons^r de Bure with 15000 footemenne and 4000 horsemenne after the Landgrafe.

SIR, my duetye remembrid. This other packet I thought to have sent sooner, heeringe that they dispatchid a currouer hense to theyr Ambassadour in England; but, forbycause that at that tyme they sent none yn deede, it hath remaynid with me tyll now.

The Frenche King hath newes owte of Germanye, that after thEmperour had taken Noerlingen, He went downewardes towardes Frankland and tooke Hall, a citey of the Protestantes confederacye, where Brentius, as I remembre, dwellith; and from thens went to an other citey of that religion named Rotenburg upon Zauber³, the whiche He tooke also. But, neverthesse, He sufferith all the townes that He hath taken to remayne yn theyr religion and beleewe, as they were before. Wherwith the Bisshop of Roome is not

contentid. And it seemith that thEmperour will wynter abowte Wirzburg, yn the saide Frankland, wherof the Bisshop of Wirzburg is Lorde and Duke; and that the Landgrave is gonne to speake with hys sonne yn lawe Duke Morice, to see whether he can bringe hym home agayne. And they wryte owte of Germanye that Duke Morice hath of late been distraught and owte of his wytte, the which seemith the more credible, forbycause that Duke Henry his father was so yn deede; and that the said Duke Moryce had besiegid Wittenbergh, but, fynding it stronge and well defendid, he removid the siege thence: and that the Duke of Saxe by this tyme is arryved yn his countrey with suche an armye as Duke Moryce shall not be able to resiste, and that it is lykelye that shortelye he will recover all that the said Duke Morice hath taken, and that therfore thEmperour hath sent the Conte de Buren after hym, to ayde the said Duke Moryce with 10 thowsande footemen and abowte 4 thowsande horsemen, who was all redye nighe to the Cownty of Catznellebogen, the which is litigious betwixte the Landgrave and the yonge Conte of Nassau, whome yn thEmperours Courte they calle Prince of Orenge¹; withoute reason in my mynde: and that all the cityes, holdinge with the Protestantes that have not payed their contribucion to this warre hitherto, have theyr money redye, and ar willinge to paye it, so that the Protestantes shall have money largelye to maynteyne this warre, yf it shall neede: and that thEmperour cawsith menne to be gatherid afresshe bynethe abowte the Ryne, either agaynst the Bisshop of Coleyn, or ellis to sette uppon the Landgrave; and that it is thoughte that thEmperour, being removid from the Dunowe syde, the garisons left at Ulme and Auspurgh and they of Wirtenbergh will soone recover the townes that thEmperour tooke uppon the Dunow betwixte Ingolstadt and Ulme, being not fortified. The Secrectarye Laubespine saith also, that there is a greate stryfe rysen betwixte the Cardynall of Trente and the Cardinall of Auspurgh, forbycause that the Bishop of Roome havinge depryvid by sentence the Bisshop of Coleyn of his Archebisshoprike, they bothe pretende to be made Bisshops there. But, as I sayed to hym, that is not lykelye, forbycause that the Bisshop of Coleyn hath a coadjutour thErle of Shawenburgh, whome the Emperour favorith well; so that I can not beleeve that enye manne shall doo hym wronge there. Marye, the Bisshop of Coleyn had also Padebourne yn Westphalie. Whether they contende for that, or no, I can not telle.

I heere saye that the Bishop of Rome labourith earnestlye to have a mariage made betwixte Segnor Horatio his sonnes sonne, that hath contynued longe yn this Courte, and a bastarde daughter of the Dolfyns¹, that ys yet but verye younge. I am crediblye enfourmid that there ar Ambassadors of the Protestantes comminge hither, and that Doctour Bruno goith into Englande.

The Frenche King gatherith greate summes of money of his subjectes; and I understande that men of greate autorite yn this Courte have spoken, that by the moneth of September nexte the King shall have largelye his two milions that He shulde paye for Boloyne, and that then He will presse, by all meanes possible, the Kinges Majestie to take the said money and redelyver Boloyne: and in cace He can not obteyne it, then He will bestowe it as He shall thinke it meete. The Frenche King hath commaundid his capitaynes of the Legioners to be all yn a redynesse theym selves and the said Legioners; under pretence, as farre as I can perceyve, that thEmperour gatherith menne abowte Luxenbourgh and other places yn the Lowe Countrey. Wherfore He will have his menne in a redynesse to.

Having written thus farre, I receyvid a letter from Doctour Bruno, with this other letter² that you shall receyve heerewith directid to you. And the Protestantes Ambassadors ar arrayvid heere all redye; wherof Franciscus Burgartus, the Chancelour of Saxe, is oon, and Doctour Bruno wille be heere within a daye or two. And having doon here, they go all together ynto England.

Sir, forbycause that these menne make muche a doo for the serchinge and stayenge of theyr menne at Dover, and that they have so earnestelye spoken to me of it; I wolde be gladd they mighte perceyve that I have advertised the Kinges Majestie of it. And thus Jesus preserve you longe yn helth and prosperite. Written at Compiegne, the 23th of December, 1546.

Wherupon I gave him concel, that finding his conscience net, he shold not be seen to stime any vaine rumoures, but rather contemne them uttirly, and that for divers consideracions it was not to his pourpose to move the thing otherwise²; but being deliberate upon certaine cawsis to fulfil his desire, I sent my Secretary with him, rather then to have accompanid him in person, lest he shold apiere by my presence to have nedid favour and patrocinye in a clere cawse. And so he declarid to this Signoria, that for soche rumoures as wer spred ayenst him, was constraynid for the defension of his honour to comme to ther presence, and trusting upon his innocencye offrid to justifie his actions at ther plesure, not stiming that the same wold conceaive evil opinion of him by false raportes, or procede ayenst him inconveniently, being a publike person.

The Dukes answer was, that for respect of Your Mageste they had given him place of honour, as they use to do to a publike parson, and that they regardid no vaine rumoures, but did procede with groundid cawsis, and with that ripe jugement as pertaynid to the governement of ther State. And shortly after the Signor Ludovico was callid two sondrye times befor the Concel of 10, and examinid upon the matter of Barnardo a long season; wherat the said Ludovico was gretely agrevid, lamenting with me of the proceedinges of thes men ayenst him, contrary to the respect of state and to thonour of Your Highnes. Wherupon I was movid to speke with the Signoria upon thes affayres, that I might with trew ground informe Your Mageste of the thinges successid. And first, I rehersed that it was to me strange to undirstand of the Signor Ludovicos travails, and to see him otherwise intretid,

then a publike parson shold be, sent hether with Your Magestes letters of credence, and also contrarye to the good amitye wich is betwen Your Highnes and this dominion; but, as I cowde not be perswadid that this Signoria, for ther most grave prudence and jugement, wold in any thing violate Your Magestes estimacion and dignite, so I cowde not likewise thinke that the Signor Ludovico wold provoke the same by soche offence, as he was vainly inputid. And I spake besides many thinges pertayning to the cawse, wich shold be long and tedious of rehersal. Wherunto the Duke answerid that Your Mageste was to them dowlles in grete reverence and estimacion respecting the same, and his ministers with that honour and dignite which was worthye so puissant a Prince, and as ther aun[cient] amitye with Your Highnes requirith; but desiring to know thauthour of Barnardos deth, and for what cawse he hath ben slaine, apou certain consideracions did put in prison one Mocenico, a gentelman of this cite, who acusid the Signor Ludovico; wherupon they cawsid him not only to be examinid, but also to be brawght to the presence of Mocenico, wich both wer so contrarious and variable in ther wordes, that no certaintye cowde be knowen by them, but only of a certaine letter sent from Mafio Bernardo to the Signor Ludovico, and by him shewid to Mocenico; wich letter doth not apiere, the said Ludovico affirming to have deliverid the letter to Mocenico, who doth denye it. And in thes affayres the Prince said, that they had procedid courtiously towards the Signor Ludovico, for respect of Your Mageste. And, forasmuche as the said Signor Ludovico offrid of his awne motion to justifie his actions, they have ben the bolder to trete with him in this matter, trusting that Your Mageste wil take ther proceedinges in good part.

Concerning thocorentes; by letters from Constantinople to this Signoria of the 10 of November, the Turkes preparacions did increase daily more and more, al men affirming that he is ful deliberate to go ayenst Vienna, and that he wil send owt 80 or 100 galeis for the defension of his contre in his absence.

Doctour Girardo, Ferdinandos Ambasadour, shold depart from Constantinople the 14 of November for Andri[nopoly] to speke with the Turke, whose legacye seamith to be lital regardid.

Don Diego, thEmperoures Ambasadour with this Signoria, hath taken licence of the same, and is going to Rome in legacye to the Bushop, whose brother Don Bernardin de Mendosa came hether owt of Spaine with a good sum of monye, and is departid to thEmperour.

I undirstand that the Bushop hath lately put a subsidew apou the clergie of the 4th part of ther revenews.

This

This Duke about 3 daies passid sent for me, to signifye unto me of the deliberacion wiche ther Senate hath made, to send an Ambasadour to Your Mageste; for the wiche I gave them large thankes in Your Magestes name, declaring that this office shold not only be gratful to Your Highnes, but also to thonour and benefite of ther dominion.

By letters of the 10 instant from thImperial campe thEmperour was mindid to winter in those townis about the Danubio, and the Protestantes wer withdrawen in to ther citees. It is raportid that the Langrave, with a good band of men, shold be gon to Franconia ayenst Herbipolis¹, Bombergo², and other Prelates, and that thEmperour wold send the Countye of Buren to folow the Langrave with 10000 fotemen with a certain number of horsmen.

It is also brutid that the Countye Palatin [is] lately comme to thEmperour to pacefyce the thi[nges] of Germanye: wiche wer exciding nedeful and profitable for the commonwelth of Cristendome.

I undirstand that of late hath ben very sharpe wordes between Granveilles and the Bushops Oratour.

The Cardinal Fernesie was arivid in Rome, and no mention is made of the Cardinals, wiche wer in grete expectacion.

The French King semith to give suspicion of warre by the late provision of monye made in Lions, and by a good sum sent to Turin for the repairing of the townis in Piemont. It hath ben also said that the French postes shold be removid from Lombardye, and set by the wais of Swiches.

Her hath ben lately the Signor of Mirandola, as somme thinke, to recaive monye for the French Kinges use. And Piero Stroczy is her at the present; but not wel knownen for what cawse.

Thus, after the kissing of Your Magestes handes most humbly, God preserve the same in most joyful helth and felicite. From Venice, the 23 of December, 1546.

Yo^r M^{tes} most faithful Servant,

EDMÖD HARVEL.

MCCCCLXII. WOTTON to KING HENRY VIII.

HIR maye please Your Majestie to be advertysid, that the 21th of this present the Secretarye de Laubespine came home to my lodginge, by the King his maisters (as he sayde) and his Counsaillles commaundement, to shewe me that on Sondaye last was sevensight a gentlemanne, cousyn to the Frenche Ambassadour resyaunt by Your Majestie, sent from the said Ambassadour yn poste with a packet for the Frenche King, arryvid at Dover, where the sercheour wolde needes serche hym. And, how be it that he alledgid what he was, and howe he was sent, and shewed his packet; yet the saide sercheour never ceassid till he had serchidde bothe hym and his servaunt, even to the nakid skinne, and tooke from theym abowte foure skore crownes, the whiche the sayde gentlemanne caryed with hym for his and his servauntes necessarye charges, leavinge to hym and his manne eight crownes onelye. And, besydes this, was the sayde gentlemanne stayed there from the sayde Sonedaye tyll the Thursdaye nexte ensewinge. And the meane season arryved there an other curroure, sent from the sayde Frenche Ambassadour with a packet to the King his maister lykewyse; who was lykewyse serchid and abowte fortye crownes, that he caryed with hym for his necessarye expenses, taken from hym, and he also stayed there from Tuesdaye tyll the sayde Thursdaye. Wherof De Laubespine sayed that the King his maister and his Counsaill wonderid muche, and thought surelye that it was not Your Majesties pleasure that his curroures shulde be so destroussidde (for so they calle it), nor stayed with theyr packettes, and that it were no good ensample to be begone. For, yf they shulde use the lyke to Your Majesties ministres and curroures, as they cowde fynde the meanes to doo, yf they wolde, to; then shulde neither his maister, nor Your Majestie, be certifyed yn tyme of your weightye affayres, as You oughte to be. And, forbycause they thoughte that Your Majesties mynde is, that your ministers and curroures shulde be sufferid to passe freelye with owte lette stoppe or stayenge, with theyr money necessarye for theyr charges and busynesses, so they thoughte that your mynde also was that the ministres and curroures of the King your good brother shulde passe lykewyse; and therefore that he had greatlye offendid bothe Your Majestie and the King your good brother, that had so orderid his servauntes bringing packettes unto Hym. Wherfore they requyrid me to certyfye Your Majestie heereof, and to wryte so earnestlye for the redresse of this matter, beinge of greate consequence, yf it shulde be sufferid, as they might perceyve that I desyerid muche the longe contynuaunce of this amitie betwixte Your two Majesties, to the conservacion wherof this waye being usid wer lyke to gyve no litle impediment. Wherunto I sayed, that heereof I had not herde before, and that what commaundement the sayde serchcour had, or had not, to doo as he sayed that he had done, I knewe not: neverthelesse, that I thoughte it was not unknowne to hym, that there was an olde statute and ordinaunce made yn England longe sith, by the whiche no manne might cary money owte of England above fortye shillinges sterling.¹ Marye, as for the stayenge of theym, yf that wer true, I wist not what that shulde meane, tylle I knewe Your Majesties pleasure yn it, and that I doubtid not but, yf they had been stayed by Your Majesties commaundement, there was somme cause whye; suche as they shulde fynde reasonable theym selves, when they shulde knowe it. For yn deede, I sayde, I thoughte Your Majesties mynde was, that the King your good brothers ministres shulde passe unstayed or lettid, as You wolde that yours shulde. “Yea, marye,” sayed De Laubespine, “there is

 “but for currours and suche as carye packettes to and fro for Prynces; yet “herde I never that enye hath been serchid there, or so stayed, but that “they mighte carye that summe with theym as was meete for theyr charges.
 “And, in case it shulde be usid agaynst currours, it shulde be agaynst all “reason and equite: for thoughe merchant menne, and other that go owte of “England, maye take an order at theyr leysir, howe to receyve theyr money
 “by the waye; so can not they that carye packettes; who, goinge for maters “of weightye importaunce concerninge the common weale of bothe the “Realmes, muste departe sodaynelye, and maye not reste by the waye, nor “yet often tymes passe thourough enye good townes, thoughe they mighte “reste by the waye, and had leysir at everye tyme to make theyr exchange, “er they departe owte of England: but they muste folowe the high waye “to the Courte, which waye so ever it lye.” And therefore, seing that other currours have not been usid to be serchid, they truste that Your Majesties pleasure is not, that theyrs shulde be serchid. And he sayed that it greevith theym the more, for that, Dover beinge a towne of greате resorte of strangiers of all nacions, this thinge done there to theyr menne shalbe noysid and spredde abrode, and it will make others to thinke that there is lytle amitye

betwixte Your two Majesties; where as the King his maister thinketh, that it were meeter that all the worlde knewe, that there ys yn deede greate and strayte amitye betwixte Your Majesties. I sayde unto hym, that I wolde not fayle to advertyse Your Majestie of that that he had shewid me. And partelye by this mannes tale, partelye also for that that thAdmyrall the nexte daye, as I was going to speake to the French King, beganne to entre ynto this mater agayne sumwhat earnestelye, sayeng that theyr menne had been destrousses (for that odiousse worde they use styлле) at Dover; it apperith that they take this mater sumwhat grevouselye, and wolde fayne have the sercheour punishid for it. Wherefore, if it maye so stande with Your Majesties pleasure, I wolde wisse that summe answer wer made theym heerein, suche as they oughte to be satisfied with all.

After that the Secretarye De Laubespine had doon with this mater, he sayed unto me that the Counsaill had herde that a poste was comme to me owte of England; and, forbycause that they had herde, that thErle of Surrey was yn warde, they requyrid me to sende theym worde what the mater was, yf I knewe it. This questyon, me thoughte, ministrid verye good occasyon to requyre accesse to the Frenche King, to declare unto Hym theeffecte of the letters of the 15th of this present¹, sent me from my Lordes of Your Majesties moste honorable Counsaill, conteyninge the moste execrable and moste abominable entent and entreprise of the said Erle of Surrey and his father the Duke of Norfolke. Wherefore I sayed unto the sayde De Laubespine, that yn deede I had receyvid letters; and that, for that self pourpose to advertise the King his maister of the truthe of that mater, I entendid to have sent to the Courte to have audience of the King his maister; but seinge I had mette with hym, I desyrid hym to take the paynes for me, and to sende me worde when it shulde please the King to heere me: the which he promysid to doo. And so the nexte daye, being the 22th of this present, I spake with the Frenche King, and declarid unto Hym the hole effect of the said letters. Whereunto the King made me this answer; that lyke as thoffice and parte of Kinges and Princes is to governe and rule by ministringe justice indifferentlye to all sorte of menne, yn exaltyng and rewarding theym that doo well, and punysshing theym that doo ylle; so lykewise the parte and dutye of subjectes is to be obedient and faithfull unto theyr Kinges and Princes. And, seing that Kinges and Princes ar callid to those roomes and offices by Goddes institution and ordonnaunce, that subject, that goith abowte to subverte that ordre, and to oppresse his Prince or his succession, how be it that he highlye and in primo gradu (for these verye wordes the King did use) offendeth his said Prince, yet therby he offendith more the commen weale of the realme, then his said Prynce; the tranquillite and weale of the hole realme depending of the Prince and his succession. And therefore that, yf the Duke of Norffolke, and his sonne thErle of Surrey, have gone abowte or have entreprised those thinges that I had declarid to Hym, He sayed that they worthelye deservid punishement for it. And He sayed, that knowing Your Majestie to be a Prince wyse juste and vertuose, He was well assurid that no private affection or passion shulde leade You to cause enye thinge to be done against theym, otherwyse then right and justice requyrith: and gave thanks to Your Majestie, that You wolde cause this mater to be declarid and communicated unto Hym. And then He askid me, whether this mater wer all redye sufficientlye provid; wherunto I sayed that by the confession of his sonne, bothe agaynst hym self and his father to: and yet I sayed the mater was yn examinacion styll. Wherat He wonderid moche, and sayed that He knewe the Duke of Norffolke, for He had been with Hym, and having founde hym verye earnest yn Your Majesties causes, He sayd He wolde never have thoughte enye suche thinge yn hym. How be it, He sayde, yf he had enye suche thinge yn his brest, it was no mervyll though he disclosid it not to Hym, knowinge the great amitye that was betwixte Your two Majesties. Wherunto I sayed that yn deede he had so dissimulid the mater, that he had deceyvid menye mennes expectacions, who had better opinion of hym. "Well," quod the King, "the King my good brother knowith right well " howe to order this mater, as well for the enserchinge owte of the trueth " of it, as also for the providinge leaste enye inconvenyence maye ryse or " ensue of theyr said entrepryse." And so, requyringe me to doo his moste hertye recommendacions to Your Majestie, He rose up and departid. And thus, givinge thanks unto God, that of His infinite goodnesse hathe revelid the develisshe pourpose of theym, that moste maliciouselye and trayterouslye have wroughte and conspyrid agaynst Your Majestie, and your moste royall estate, I beseche Jesus longe to preserve Your Highnesse yn helth and all felicite. To the Kinges moste excellent Majeste.

AFTER my most hartly commendations to you. When as the Lansgrave removed his campe, wherein he lay so longe, neare unto Lawingen and neare unto Sowntam, the bruyte was here woon day that he was runne a way, the next day that he was gon to a better loggyng; and, as the rumor varied, so I advertised to M^r Wotton, as ye may perceyve by the copie of my letters to M^r Wotton, whiche I have sent to you by Signor Barnardyne. And, because I had determyned to send M^r Barnardyne to advertise the Kinges Majestic, apou the dissolution of either campe, he folowed thEmperour to Neorlinge, and so furthe, to lerne the certentie what was become of the Lansgrave; whiche as sone as we coude lerne, I despechid hym with letters to the Kinges Majestic, the copie of my lettours to you, sent by hym, ye shall herwith receyve. Syns the Lansgrave went a way, parte of the towns Imperiall (whiche were confederated with the Duke of Sax and the Lansgrave at Smallcalde) hathe rendred them sylfes to thEmperour; before the departure of M^r Barnardyne, Neorlinge, Dingelspill, and Rotenburgh; and sins, Hale in Swevia, and Halebrun, some calith it Haltprun; and the 23 day of this monyth the Burghmasters of Ulmes, knelinge before thEmperour as He cam from Masse, rendred their towne to his marcy, whom thEmperour receyved, and said in tyme they sholde perceyve what his mercy was. I was advertised that they of Hale sholde gyve to thEmperour for parte of theyr pennaunce 50000 florynes; yt ys thought that all theis towns shall paye weall. The Duke of Wirtenbergh hathe made, and dayly makith, great and humble suyte to thEmperour for grace. I have bene advertised, from a good place, that thEmperour myndith to accepte his suyte, but not tyll that he shall first have won or two of his strongest holdes in his handes, wherwith to chasteyne hym in case that he sholde hereafter attempte eny thinge ageynste thEmperour. I here as yet no thinge that Strausburgh or Ausburgh hathe made eny meanes for their submission. And I here that Chartell², who is capitayne of the bande of August, hath entred about Townward, Tillinge, and Lawingen, and hathe burnt and spoyled there, but they say the towns be saufe, and that thEmperour myndith to take ordre for the more suertie of the same. In case the submission of the Duke of Wirtinberg be won made, men of judgement here thinkith that Strauseburgh and Ausburgh will sone comme to an appoyntment. Thus I wright to you mens gessinges here, for it is harde to knowe the certeynetie of thinges untill that they be paste. Musika, who servyth as a Commissarie for the victuales at Tonwarde under Francisco de Warte¹, tolde me, being at Neorlinge with the said Francisco, that thEmperour practised with the Countie Palatyne to bringe the Electorshippe to the sonne² of the Duke of Bavare, who hathe married with the Kinge of Romayns doughter. I have made as good serche as I can to lerne the truthe herof, but I can not advertise more certeynetie herin, but only that he tolde yt me. The Countie Palatine at his reparinge to thEmperours presence, which was two dayes after his commynge to Hale, made his submission to Hym very lowlie, but (as yt was tolde me) thEmperour gave hym a straunge countenaunce, with an answer that He wolde use hym as He sholde fynde hym, and remitted hym ageyne to Grandevela, with whom he had divers conferences before; but the said Countie repayringe to thEmperour won other day there, he was more familiarly receyved, and had better countynaunce. And where, at his fyrst departure from thEmperour, none but his owne folkes kept hym company, at thoder tyme I harde saie that divers gentillmen of the Courte went with hym to his lodgyng, whiche was not farre from thEmperours. They talke here that he is holy thEmperours ageyne; but I cannot lerne that he suyth for eny other, as before I had harde the he sholde do. The Duke of Wirtinbergh his londes lithe adjoynynge to this town, and here abought thEmperours men of warre, bothe of horse and also of fote, lieth in villages, whiche is here counted abought 10^{ne} or 11^{ne} thousande men; and in case thEmperour can shortly take his determynation (as some thinkith He shall) with this Duke, and Auguste and Strauseburgh, then they say we shall either to Spire or to Wormes, there to kepe a Diete, and to be nere the Lansgrave, apon whome (as we say here) thEmperour will not cease, untill He have his plesure. At the begynnynge of theis warres, and untill the Lansgraves departinge from his army, in all mens judgement here, his power was not inferiour to thEmperours; and now, sins this chaunge, every man almost that I talke with hathe this verse in his mouthe: "A Domino factum est istud, et est mirabile in oculis nostris." What sholde be the cause of his so departinge, I cannot other lerne, then for whant of mony, whiche to paye any lenger the cyties were wery, and we harde in thEmperours campe, by a soldiour of the Lansgraves that was taken prisoner, that the Lansgraves men of warre kried, "gelt, gelt," abought 2 or 3 dayes before he removed his campe, that lay so longe by Sowntam. Yesterday went certeyne light horsemen of thEmperours to a village (as they here terme yt, but yt ys walled) of the Dukes of Wirtinbergh, but they were repulsed with the villaynes and certeyne soldiours that were there; therfore thider is gone ageyne this daye the Prince of Salamona, with a good band of horsemen, to sakke the same.

Doctor Vasallius, won of thEmperours phesiciens, dyned with me this day, and said that the Duke of Wirtenbergh sholde comme hither to thEmperour, and in that the County Palatyne was a travaler; he said further, that the said Duke of Wirtenbergh had written to the Duke of Bavare longe sins, to be a meanes to thEmperour for hym, and in the same letters (as he said) sholde wright, that raither then he sholde be an outlawe from his contrie 14 yeres, as he was won, he wolde gyve all the preachers that he had to thEmperour to make a sacrifice of them; with suche other light wordes. Theis be al suche thinges that I have here lernyd sins M^r Barnardynes despeache; and because I here not of his aryvall with you, I do sende you herwith his letter¹ written to me after that he had receyved my despeache, wher ye may se suche newis as he wrote to me from the campe.

Because ye wolhave me to be no nygarde of the Kinges Majesties purse, havynge none other thinge tadvertise, yet I have with theis despeached Bluemantell His Highnes servaunt, who hathe noted diligently suche thinges as hathe passed in theis warres, by whome ye may knowe suche thinges as paradventure ye be contente to knowe, and my folisshe judgement hathe not thought worthe the wrightinge. I pray you have this man in your good remembraunce, and let not this occasion of his beinge here be an hyndraunce to hym in suche thinges werto he myght have bene prefarrid, in case he had bene at home, thorowgh the commendations of suche as knowthe hym. I take yt a benyfite to me when suche as servyth the Kinges Majestie in my companie be had in good remembraunce. He makith his owne charges homme, whiche I pray you to cause there to be repayed.

I wolde wright unto you my harte (if I coulde) ageynst those two ungracious ingrate and inhumane non homines, the Duke of Norfolke and his sonne, thelder of whome I confesse that I did love, for that I ever supposed hym a true servaunte to his master, like as bothe his allegiaunce and the manifolde benifites of the Kinges Majestic bounde hym to have bene. But, nowe when I sholde begyn to wright to you herin, before God I am so amased at the matter, that I knowe not what to say: therfore I shall leave them to receyve for their deades, as they have worthely deservyd, and thanke God of His grace that hathe openyd this in tyme, so that the Kinges Majestic may se yt reformed. And in this point, where Almyghty God hathe not nowe alone, but often and sondry tymes hertofore, not only letted the malice of suche, as hathe imagenyd eny treason ageynst the Kinges Majestic, the cheafe conforte, wealth, and prosperite of all good Inglisshemen next unto God, but hathe so wonderfully manifest yt, and in suche tyme that His Majesties high wisdom myght let that malyce to take his effecte, all good Inglisshemen cannot herfore thanke God enough, and for our parte I pray God that we may, thorough His grace, so contynue his servauntes, that hereafter we be not founde unworthy to receyve suche a benyfite at his handes.

On Christemas Evyn about 3 of the clocke after none here aryved Somerset, with the letters of the Kinges Majesties most honorable Counsell dated the 15^{ne} of Decembre at Westminster, wherby I perceyved the malicious purpose of the said two ungracious men, and for the execution of the Kinges Majesties commaundement declared in the same letters, I suyd immediatly for audience to thEmperour, Who entred this town within halfe an houer after Somerset was comme. ThEmperour praied me of patience, and to declare to the Secretarie Joyse that I wolde saie to Hym, for He said He had determyned to repose Hym sylfe for 3 or 4 dayes, and had therfore for that tyme refused audience to the Nuntio, the Ambassadour of Fraunce, and thAmbassadour of Venyce, whiche had sued for audience. On Christmas Day¹, on the mornynge at 9 of the clocke, Joyse cam to my lodgyng, to whome I declared, as weall as I coulde, the great benifites theis two ungracious men had receyved at the Kinges Majesties handes, and how unkindly and traytorously they went about to serve Hym, with the rest, as myn instructyons led me; "the Kinges Majestic my master (takinge the " same affectyon to be in thEmperour his good brother towards Hym, that " His Highnes hathe to thEmperour, ut amicorum omnia sint communia, " gaudere cum gaudentibus, flere cum flentibus) hathe commaunded me to
" open this matter to thEmperour, that, as naturally all men, and moche more
" Princes, ought to abhore traytours, and specially suche as had receyved

¹ "On Christmas Day" are underscored in the original, and "This day" inserted in Thirlby's hand.

“ so great benyfites as theis men had, so His Majestie might rejoyse, that “ the Kinges Highnes his good brother had founde forthe this matter, or “ the malice coulde be brought to execution.” Secretary Joyse said that he wolde advertise thEmperour herof accordingly, and after a litle talke of the haultenes of the Erle of Surrey and a few salutations, he bad me fare weall. When I asked hym for Mons’ de Grandevela, to whome I sayd that I wolde tell this tale, for that I doubted not but that he and all honest men wolde abhorre suche traytours, he said that he was not yet comme, but he wolde this day advertise hym herof by his letters, “for I wright” (quod he) “dayly to hym.”

Albeit that this be thole and theffecte of that I have done in the execution of the Kinges Majesties commaundement, declared in my said Lordes letters, yet I will, as my dutie is, answeere a parte their said letters.¹ To the Kinges Majestie herin I dare not wright, for to entre the matter, and not to deteste yt, as the case requyrith, I thinke yt not convenyent, and ageyne on thoder syde to renewe the memorie of theyse mens ingratitude (wherwith all noble and princely hartes above all others be sone woonded), I thinke yt not wisdome; therefore I besiche you hartely, emonges other my good Lordes there, to make my most humble excuse to His Majestie for the same. This ungratious matter, that hathe happenyd otherwise then ever I could have thought, hathe caused you to have a longer letter then ever I have bene accustomed to wright. Ye shall herwith receyve a cedula of Courte newis, whiche Honynge lernyd, wiles I wrote this. Secretarye Joyse hathe prayed me to sende the letters herwith enclosed to thEmperours Ambassadour in Englonde, whiche I pray you to cause to be delyvered, and hartely fare you weall. From Halebourne, this Cristmas Day at night, 1546.

To the right honorable, Sir William Paget, Knight,
 one of the Kinges Majesties two Principall Secretaries.

MCCCCLXIV. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to WOTTON.¹

AFTER our right hartly commendations. The Kinges Majestic hath seen your letters writen unto His Highnes, with the others directed unto me, Sir William Paget, and taketh your proceedinges touching your charge for my Lord of Norfolkes mater, and your aunswer to the staing of their curroure at Dover with all other your doinges, in very good and thankfull part; further signifying unto, that, albeit the lawes and statutes be such, as it is not lafull to any person to cary money out of the realme, yet, forasmuche as curroures and postes going in Princes affayres have alwayes for their better expedition been consydered and favoured in that part, His Majestic, taking very ill the demeanour of the Serchour of Dover towardes theyr curroure, hath willed us to sende for him, for whose correction such ordre shalbe taken as it shall well appere that His Majestic doth take his doinges displeasantly.

And, whereas we understande by your sayd letters that Ambassadors be cum thither from the Protestantes, and Doctour Bruno with them, mynding shortly to repayre hither also; forasmuche as it is to be thought that their cumming thus to both is but for one thing, you shall requyre the sayd Bruno to cause the sayd Ambassadors to travail, asmoche as they can, to enduce the Frenche King to entre leage with them furst. For if, upon their motion of that mater furst unto His Highnes, He shuld peradventure agree to entre league with the Protestantes, it may be that the French King wold take occasion thereby for his advauntage to slipp to thEmpercur, which may breede mervailous gret inconveniencies, as we doubt not but you do consydre the same.

Further you shall undrestande that the French Ambassadors and Polino, having eyther of them aparte letters of credence from their maister, had acces to His Majestic. ThAmbassadors credence was only for the comprehension of the Scottes; wherin aunswer was made him, that the Kinges Majestic thinkith the Scottes cannot clayme the benefit of comprehension. Nevertheles look, what by the treaty His Majestic was bownden to do, shuld alwayes be done, and that for the love He beareth to the King his good brother, the fault shuld be in the Scottes, if thinges went not well.

Polinos charge consisted in thre pointes ; the fortifications, the limites, and the galley. For the fortifications, he sayd that nowe the Kinges Majestie hath herd the reasons on both sydes, the King his maister was content to make His Majestie judge in the matier, and to have it ordered as He shuld thinke convenient, without buyldeng any more then His Majestie shall be pleased withal. For the lymytes, we see no cause why we shuld departe with Villemontyer ; and in that poynte they were so aunswered, as they had good cause to be satisfyed. And yet we shall eftsones, by His Majesties commandement, talke with them of it ; which we mynde to doo tomorowe, and then to grow to a reasonable conclusion with them, so as ye shalbe enformed of such our conference, as we shal have in that behalf. And for the galee, we dyd so fully answere them, that they wisshed they might have her either by gifte or justice ; they make no choise, so they may have her restored nowe, by either meane.

And this was theeffect of our communication hitherto, which we thought mete tadvertise in the meane season, to thintent ye might be hable to aunswere according to theeffect of the same, occasion serving therunto, accordingly.

Fynally you shal undrestand, that the Kinges Majestie lately, uppon som grief of his leg, was entred into a fever ; but, thanks be to God, well rydde of it, and nowe in such estate of helth, as we trust His Majestie shal fynde Hymself the bettre for it a greate while. Wherof also we thought to gyve you knoweledge, to thende you might trulye speake in the matier, as ye be certenly enformed, in cace any light brute maye rise there for the contrarye.

MCCCCLXV. MONT to KING HENRY VIII.¹

SERENISSIME Rex ac Domine clementissime. In ultimis litteris ad Majestatem Vestram quintadecima hujus mensis datis, scripsi Cesarem quatuor urbes ex Protestantium numero, Nordlingham, Duncelspoel, Rotenburgum, et Hallim, in deditionem accepisse, medio tempore Ulma, Heilbrunna, Sueinfortum, supplices a Cesare gratiam exorarunt. Augusta quoque modo suos Oratores apud Cesarem habet, pro gratia et pace exoranda. Francfordia quoque ad Comitum Beurensem misit, rogans ut hic depræcator et intercessor pro eis apud Cesarum

¹ Holograph.

Majestatem esse velit, qui id se facturum benigne pollicitus est, modo ipsi quoque propediem suos Oratores ad Cesarem mittant, quod se facturos receperunt, et hesterno die pro ea legatione decernenda omnium ordinum consensum Consules acceperunt. Palatinus Elector modo in tertiam septimanam Cesarem sequitur (et ut fertur) difficulter a Cesare gratiam consecutus est; Protestantibus enim in subsidium miserat trecentos equites, et duo vexilla peditum. Dux Wirtembergensis quoque pro pace et reconciliatione apud Cesarem laborare dicitur, per intercessorem Guilielmum Baviariæ Ducem, sed Cesar omnino velle dicitur ut cedat regimen et Ducatus administrationem Christophoro filio suo, qui non usque adeo Protestantium religioni favere dicitur, et ex sorore dicti Guilielmi natus est; adeoque liga illa Smalcaldica modo ex magna parte dissolvitur et dirumpitur. Comes a Beurn in eum comitatum qui Catzenelnbogensis dicitur, qui a Lantgravio possessus est, intra quatrimum advenit, exercitu quatuor milium equitum, et peditum milium octo, et præcipua loca et vicos ejus comitatus ad deditionem coegit, celebriori, pro ijs locis, oppidulo Darmstat vi per tertium assultum expugnato. Hic comitatus arcem habet ad Menum sitam, quæ presidio firmata est, et obsidionis eventum experiri velle videtur. Beurensis quoque in itinere Comites ab Erpach, quos una cum reliquo equitatu Palatinus ad Protestantes miserat, gravi pecunia multavit. Ipse Lantgravius Cassellis esse dicitur, sed vires ejus tenuiores sunt, quam que tantam potentiam reprimere possint. Ipse enim Imperator non longe a Comite abest, qui omnem fere equitatum adhuc penes se habet. Civitates quoque Superioris Germanie defessæ bello, et pecunia exhaustæ, quascunque pacis conditiones accepture videntur, salva religione; quam Imperator se promittit et asserit permissurum Concilio, vel generali vel nationali, dijudicandam et cognoscendam, et illæ deinceps exiguum certe opem Hesso aut Saxoni lature videntur. Saxonie Dux aliquot oppida et loca a Mauritio occupata recuperavit. Sed que horum Principum fors futura sit, adhucdum incertum est; gratiam quidem et favorem apud plurimos et præcipuæ doctrinæ Evangelice Professores habent, sed Imperatoris presens potentia et jus civitates cogit, ut in presenti necessitate sibi quæque consulant; tum Germanie dissensio et discordia omnes in desperationem adigit letioris successus. Regnum enim in se divisum desolabitur. Ego sub debita et fide et observantia Regie Vestræ Majestati me supplicem addico. Datum Oxonie, vicesima septima Decembris, anno 1546.

Serenissimæ atque Regiæ

Majestatis Vestræ

MCCCCLXVI. THIRLBY to PAGET.¹

AFTER my most harty commendations to you. Havyng receyved theis lettours herin enclosed² from M^r Barnardyne, and perceyvynge by the same that he remayned so longe with Mons^r de Bures, my harte was coude therat; for I supposed suerly that he sholde have bene with the Kinges Majestie, or that Somerset aryved here; but this is my maleuritie. Wonderfull sory I am that His Majestie was not advertised in tyme of the Lansgraves brekinge of his army, and of other our occurrentes here, as I hoped His Highnes had bene. I refuse all excuses herfore, and only submytte me to his most graciouse mercy. Bluemantell (I trust) shall aryve with you in better diligence. I have no great store here with me to sende, that I can weall spare; for although I have meny men, yet I have fewe servauntes. The 26 of this monyth Somerset and Blewmantell departyd hence to Spires to gider, and thens Somerset to do suche busynes of the Kinges Majestie as he had to do further, and Bluemantell to goo straight into Englonde.

Here aryved the Countie Palatyne and 2 Commissaries with hym, for the Duke of Wirtenberge, on the 28th day of this monyth. We talke here that his offers be so large that thEmperour will receyve bothe them and hym into his grace; but thEmperour hathe taken deliberation untill this day to make them answer. Now it ys evydent that the Countye Palatyne is a mediatour for the Duke. Notwithstandynge all the bruyt that hathe bene hertofore that the Duke made so moche suyte to have grace at thEmperour, yet the 27th of this monyth the Duke of Alva and the army marched towarde Stockerde, won of the cheafe towns in Wirtenberge, 5 leages hence, and by the waye sacked a town of the Dukes; and syns the departure of tharmy, a house, whiche the said Duke of Wirtenbergh bathe in this towne, weall replenissh with wyne and corne (for he hathe all the tythes of the londe about this towne, and reservyth yt in the said house) I say this house was gyven to spoyle to thEmperours halberders (as I harde say). If thEmperour shall agre with the Duke, we loke suerly to comme nerer you, eyther to Spires or to Wormes. Nowe we begyn to talke that thEmperour will to Frankeforde, whiche (as the newis cam hyther yester day) is rendered to Mons^r

Mons^r de Deake hathe promysed to sende theis lettours to Antwerpe; wherfore I have written to the Governer there to se them diligently conveyed to you. MCCCCLXVII. WOTTON to PAGET.

SIR, my ductye remembrid. The Cardinall Belay hath sent a servaunt of his to me, to shewe me that the wyne (the which as I remembre is tenne peecis), that you shulde have of hym, is redye to be deliverid, and his factour wolde have delivered it to certayn Englishe merchantes, who wolde not meddle with it. Wherfore he requyrid me to advertise you of it, and that you wille appoynte summe merchant, or other that goith thither, to receyve it for you. I askid his manne what the merchantes names were, that refusid it. He shewid me a letter written to his maister, wheryn his factour sayed that he had receyved suche peeces and suche peeces of wyne, and how he was appoyntid to bestowe theym, and that, as for the wyne that you shulde have, neither the Kinges Majestes sommeliers were yet comme thither, nor suche Englishe marchantes, as he had spoken unto to receyve it, wolde not meddle with it; so that no manne was namid yn the letter. Wherfore it shall be well done that when enye goith nexte thither, that you cause hym to be spoken withall to receyve it, or ellis to demande it. For I have founde the Cardynall so redye for the payment of the wager lost to my Lord of Herforde, that I thinke surelye that this is no faynid mater neither.

Sir, I understande that the Queene of Navarre is sent for, and will be heere shortelye; wherof menne gather that the Protestantes mater is lyke to prosper the better. The sayd Protestantes have had theyr answer, and ar

verye shortelye departinge hence towards you. They declare not unto me, nor I wolde not be busye to aske theym, of theyr procedinges heere, savinge that they saye that they fynde the Frenche King verye conformable, and have had a good answer. I heere of other, that they have declarid theyr greate necessite to the Frenche King, the greate danger that all other Princes shalbe yn, yf they the Protestantes be overtroden. For what thEmperours entent is, dothe to manifestlye appere; for against whome hathe not He warrid to bringe his purpose to effecte? Wherefore they requyrid assistance of the Frenche King. And that the Frenche King answerid theym, that He had made a peax and confederacye with his good brother the King of England, whome He knewe to be of good mynde and affection towards theyr maisters, and that the amitye betwixte Hym and the Kinges Majeste was suche, that He wolde woorke yn all thinges by his counsaill; and therfore that they shulde go to the Kinges Majeste, and looke what comforte and ayde they cowde obteyne at His Majestes handes, the lyke they shulde have of Hym. And that the said Ambassadors mislykid not the said answer; neverthelesse they declarid to the King, the greate necessetye that theyr maisters wer yn now presentlye, for that Duke Moryce had attemptid yn Saxonye; and that thEmperour had made, even now, new menne to renforce his armyes, against all mennes opinions, who thoughte that the warre wolde ceasse for this wynter; and that his new forces were all redye joynid with Mons^r de Buren, and marchid forward. And therfore, unlesse the Protestantes have summe succour, even sodaynelye, they ar lyke to be yn verye greate dangier; and therfore requyrid the Frenche King to have this mater yn consideracion presentlye. For, yf the mater be delayed by goinge first ynto England, and then by sending to and fro, it maye chance to be sumwhat late to helpe the mater. What answer they have had heereupon, I heere not, saving that by theyr contentacion of the Frenche Kinges aunswer, and for theyr urgent necessetie, wherof the Frenche King is well advertisid, I reken that they have had summe better answer then onelye fayre wordes. Doctour Bruno camme not this waye, as it was tolde me that he wolde. And thus Jesus preserve you longe yn helth and prosperite. Written at Compiegne, the 30th of December, 1546.

Yours ever to commaunde,

MCCCCLXVIII. THIRLBY to PAGET.¹

AFTER my most hartly commendacions to you. The 30th of December I advertesid you by my letters, sent in Mons^r de Deakes paket to Antwerpe, (the copy wherof you shall herwith receyve) of the likelihod of thaggrement with the Duke of Wirtenberg. Yesternight the newis cam that the Duke ys contentid to rendre into the Emperours handes certeyn of his townes and holdes, and to paye suche money as ye shall perceyve better by the docket herin enclosid.² And yet now we be not so whott to talke of our commyng to Spyres or nerer, as we wer 7 or 8 days past, what the cause is I wot not, unles it be to gyve a feare to them of August and Strausburgh to make them to com yn, of whose suyt yet I can lerne no thing; but suerly in every mans opinion,

"ThEmperour sent hens Mons^r de Kenriche to the King of Romans, (it is sayd) to provyde succours for the Duke Mauryce of Sax, the fift of this monithe.

this

this Duke of Wirtenberg being now submitted, they must of necessity sue for grace. The Duke of Sax late Electour (as the bruyt ys here) ys entred Duke Mauricius country; wherfor thEmperour hathe cawsid ordre to be taken for ayde, as in the said doket. ThAmbassadour of Venize is advertesid that the Turke is comme to Andreanopoli, and makithe great preparations for this yere to warre; but dyvers thinkithe here that thEmperour shall so compounde his matters in Germany, that unles the Frenche King set in fote, He shall be redy to resist by the tyme that the Turke can entre; or els peradventure the Turke hering at lengthe this successe that thEmperour now hathe, against the expectation of the most parte of the worlde, muche different from that that was bruytid and was in deede 2 monithes past, may do (as some talke here of the Frenche) as the case changithe so to change his purpose. This for hast I wryte tumultuarice, the messinger ys apon his departing. Hartely fare ye well. From Halebrunne, this twelf day after none, 1546.

AFTER my most hartye commendations to you. Thies shalbe tadvertise you that thEmperour gothe to Ulmes, thear to take the diet for the cure of his gowt, and as some hathe said, He woll have a Diet there for the cure of Germany, but as yet I knowe no certenty therof. We think here that this long holding of of theym of Auguste, (whiche I here not to have made suyte for their grace) ys the cause, that we shall to Ulme, for so shall August be in a maner beseged (as we say); Bavarya on thon side, the County of Teroll on thother, and nowe thEmperour on the thirde; so they of August shall be compelled to cry misericordia, orels to lyve with that that they have allredy gathered. The town ys thought to strong to wyne yt by force.

Strausburghe, Lynden, Ravensburghe, Wybre², Iznau³, Luycurg, Vaug, Memingen, and Kempten, hathe mette together of late at Ulme, and agreed to rendre them self to thEmperours mercy, and have sent hither to have licence to comme, which was graunted theym; but sins thEmperours determination to go to Ulme, Mons^r de Grandvele hathe sent to stay theym, untill thEmperour shall come to Ulme. Sins I beganne to wright this, yt was tolde me that August hade made motion, indirectly, to know with what good conditions they might be received; but thEmperour refusithe that maner of submission, nowe Wirtinbergh ys comme yn: and that Strausburghe with the other fornamed Imperiall cities will submitte theym sylfes, every man here thinkithe that August can not hold owt, onles that some foren power helpithe them. The Commissaries of the Duke of Wyrtenberghe have made theyr fussefall, and kneled before thEmperour the 8 of this monythe, to aske grace for the Duke their master; and, as I here, the Duke must do the lyke in his own person within the space of 6 wekes next following. They of Frankfurthe shall do the lyke, this day, as I here. I have made serche to get tharticles of thagrement with the Duke of Wyrtenberghe, because I here theron so meny dyvers tales. And, sins I last wrote to you, I here say that the Castle of Hehen Byell, whiche lythe nye to the Swishers, shall not be rendred to thEmperour, but only 2 great townes and 2 castles, wherof they say nowe Tubinga (which ys an Universyte) shold be won: yf I can get thies articles, I will sende them.

Yesterday Signor Amerigo Antynory (who served the Kinges Majeste in the last warres against Fraunce) cam to visyte me, with offre of his service to the Kinges Majeste, when His Highnes shall commande hym. And, becaus I knewe not well his name, I praid Thomas Waus, Scottishe man and good Frenche also, who cam with hym as his servant, to wright me his name, who hathe written as ye shall perceyve by this bill herin enclosed, whiche I doubt not but you will regarde as apperteinithe. Anthonyo Lotty, who cam with the said Amerigo, said that he wolde go with diligence into England, and offred to cary my letters, with service that he could do. Therfor I have written thes fewe by hym; and by the same ye shall receive the copie of 2 letters sent to you, the 30 Decembris, thother 6 January. With other sent before I will not troble you, for I have harde that M^r Barnardyn and Blewmantill were passed into Flaunders, and so I trust they have arrived with you saulf; but I assure you I can not but be sory when I remembre the slow passage of M^r Barnardyn, and so shall remayn, untill that I here from you some comphortable wordes. Becaus I perceyve from M^r Carne that he hathe not received my letters sent to hym by Secretary Joyse 21 Novembris, by whom also I wrote to you the same day, fering les that your letters shold be also reteyned¹, I have sent you the copies of the same letters by this messenger, that ye may see, what they were. Thus, &c. Halebrunne, 10^o Januarij, 1546.

Antonio Lotte praid me to recommede hym to you, with offre of his service to the Kinges Majestie, wherin fewe wordes shall neade to you; yf ye talke with hym ye may perchance lerne some thing of thEmperours doinges. After the Italians discours yt ys good to here all, and to beleve as you see cause.

MCCCCLXX. CARNE to PAGET.

PLEASYTH yt your Mastership to be advertised, that yesternight the Lady Regent here receyved letters from Spyres, thadvertisment wherof, as I am credeably enformed, is that the Dewke of Wyttenbergh hath made his apoyntment with thEmperor, for the which he paythe (as they saye here) owt of hande thre hundrith thowsen gylderns, and forgoith to thEmperor and his for ever 4^{or} of the strongest castelles that he hath. But from thEmperor She hath receyved no suche letters as yet; notwithstandinge that She hadd recevyd before from thEmperor the conditions of the seid Dewkes peax, and that the seyde conditions wer sent unto hym. Therfor yt is spookyn here for truyth that it is lyekely to be true.

Also they saye here that all the free cyties of Germany have theyr Ambassadors with thEmperor for peax. As touching the Landsgrave, here is no speache where he is. Farther yt is reported here credeably, that the last Dewke of Loren is brother, which was Bisshop of Metz in Loren, and late made Cardynall¹, haeth forsakyn boeth Bisshoprich and Cardinalship, and is marryed to oon in Fraunce, as they saye here, of the howse of S^t Powle, which is not well takyn here, for that it is thoght to be doen to the intent that the seyde late Bisshop, beinge next of kyn to the children of Loren, shuld clayme the governaunce of the countre of Loren, tyll the children comme to age, and so consequently to bringe it to the Frenchmen is handes. Other occurrantes here be nonne at this tyme. The premisses I thoght good tadvertise you of, besichinge you to take this

MCCCCLXXI. THE PRIVY COUNCIL to COBHAM.¹

AFTER our right harty commendations to Your good Lordship. These shalbe to signefie unto the same, that the Kinges Majeste, uppon advertisment that thEmperour and French King be both in armes, and not knoweng what shuld be ment by the same; albeit His Hieghnes is in frendship and amitie with Them, so as there nedith not to be any doubt, saving wisdom and policie admonisheth suretie for the worst which might happen; yet His Majeste hath thought convenyent to wil and require you, my Lord Depute, not only for your oune parte to be uppon your garde, and to lye within your charge continually, and to cause all others there to doo the semblable with sure watche at home, and espiall abroad, from tyme to tyme to lerne what your neighbours meane, and whider they tende with such power as they levy; but also to signefie hither with all diligence possible the perfite nombres of your garrisons within the several peces within your commission, and lykewise howe you be furnished of vitailles, and what you have of late receyved by M^r Auchers ordre accordingly.

MCCCCLXXII. THIRLBY to PAGET.¹

AFTER my most harty commendacions. The 10 of this present monithe I wrote to you by Anthonio Lotte, marchant Florentyn, and sent with the same the copyes of my letters 30 Decembris and 6^o Januarij, with cotype of my letters 21 Novembris sent by the Secretary Joyse, fering les the same wer not deliverid to you; and the same 10 day I sent to you the copyes of all that dispeache (except my said letters of 21 Novembris) by Mons^r de Deakes dispeche, because the said Anthonio promysed me to delyver my letters to you, as suerly as that I shuld have sent a specyall messenger, I leave to make further repetition therof. Syns that tyme, ther is com to my handes the copy of thEmperours letters sent to the Duke of Wirtenberg from Rothenberg, and the Dukes answer to the same, and also the maner of his submission to thEmperour, which all ye shall receyve written in the Duche tonge.² And to shew you som parte of my litle connyng, I have translated into Englisshe the Dukes answer and submission, and causid it to be written with the same; wherin peradventure albeit that ye shall see clerkly Englisshe owt of an unclerkly hed, and wordes sumwhat affected, impute it to my litle knowledge in the Duche tonge, by reason wherof I am compellid to folow muche the Duche phrase. ThEmperours letter is so longe, and so evel written, that I cold not reade yt, and muche les understand yt.

Syns this submission, when the castell of Asperges shuld have ben rendrid to thEmperour, a gentleman of the Dukes Cownsell, namid Willielmus a Massenbaugh, being within the same castell, refusid to rendre; for that (as they say) his landes and howsis, which liethe therabowte, wer distroyed and brent by tharmey whiles they lay there abowte the said castell, and all his goodes by the same army spoyled; now therfor, (they say) unles he may be therfor recompensid, he will not rendre. The castell is very stronge and well mannyd and victualid. Yt is thought that (unles it be done by some collusion betwixt the Duke and him) he shall not dare longe resist.

Of the newis from Gens (which be here certainly affirmyd, saving that they speak not muche of the Frenche Kinges doing theron) ye shall perceyve by the doket herwith sent.¹ Theis matters may make them here (though they say nothing) to suspecte the Frenche more then they will acknowledge.

But now it is deferryd for 5 or 6 days, bycawse (as they say) them of August will com hither to thEmperour: and so, those matters brought to staye, then we shuld to Spyres or to Wormes. Yf that be true that yet is here affirmyd, viz. that the Frenche King gatheryd men, that may be an allectyve to drawe us nere to the Ryne. Tyll the thinges be passed, we do but gesse, suche is here their secrecy. And of our newis from Sax ye shall perceyve in the said doket.² &c. from Halebrunne, 13^o Januarij, 1546.

¹ "Advys from Genes of the third of January, and arryved here the 12 of the same.

"That the second of the same the Conte de Flestho entrid the haven with fowre his galeis armed, for that Andrea Doria his galeis (albeit lieng in the said haven) wer unarmyd, and shotte his artillery, meaning to drowne the same. Gianettin Doria hering this great bruyt, cam owt of his howse to know the thing, who was at the going owt slayne. The said Conte understanding the forsaid Gianettin Doria to be slayne, cam with his men to lande to do their entrepryns, cryeng, as some saith, 'Liberty,' other saithe, 'France,' and so entrid the towne. The towne was by and by in a great rore, so that the Magistrates cam to the Prince Doria (who was then sicke), and confortid him, saieng that he shuld not doubt they wer good frendes and servauntes to thEmperour. In the meane whyle some of the towne resistid the said Conte. Won, amongst all other, shotte his arquebute even as the said Conte wold have entrid his galy, and hitt him, that he felle into the see, where he was drownid. His two brethern taken, and put there in pryson."

"Item, that those of August hathe written to comme hither within two dayes (as they say) to rendre them selves, in respect wherof thEmperour remaynithe yet here certeyn dayes. Yf they come, it is thought thEmperour will not to Ulmes, but rather to Wormes, or Spyres.

"Carol Wich Prefectus Lipcij is comme hither the 11 of January, they say to demaunde hast of the socour promesid, for that Duke John Fredericke is entryd Mauricius his masters landes, and dothe great hurte, and hathe forsid the said Duke Maurice to breke up his siege layd by him at Wittenberg."

MCCCCLXXIII. THIRLBY to KING HENRY VIII.

PLEASITHE yt Your Roiall Majeste to be advertised, that the 14th of this monythe Mons^r dArras shewed me, that thEmperour had commaunded hym to declare to me the state of his affaires here, tadvertise Your Highnes therof, allthoughe He had at full written to his Ambassadour resident withe Your Majestie to declare the same to Your Highnes; doubting not, but Your Majestie, as his good brother and his assured frende, wolde be gladde to here of his good successe. “Syns” (quod he) “the “hathe taken won town of the Lansgraves perforce, and hathe had rendred

 “to hym, for thEmperours behalf, Frankeforde, whear he hathe nowe a “bowght thre thousande footemen within the same. ThEmperour Hymselfe “(as ye knowe,” quod he) “cam into theis parties, and hathe had rendred to “Hym Hale, Ulme, this town, and the Dukedom of Wirtenberge, withe suche “honorable conditions as is possible to have;” and here he tolde me that the Duke hathe renounced his leage that he had with the Duke of Sax, late Electour, and the Lansgrave, and hathe confirmed the Banne Imperiall against the same. Secondly, that he sholde pay to thEmperour two hundrithe thousande crownes, the won half within fyveten dayes, thoder within 40 dayes. Thirdly, that he sholde never make leage, but he shulde reserve allwayes the King of Romayns and the House of Austria, as comprehenses in the same. Fourthely, that he sholde be obedient to the justice Camere Imperialis, and thear to answer every man that wolde complayn to be dammaged by hym. Fivetly, that he hym self sholde not gyve ayde, ne suffer none withe in his Dukedom and other his possessions, to ayde ageinst thEmperour, directly or undirectly, in eny warres either within thEmpyre, orels whear. Sixtely, that he sholde affirme the convenaunte of Cadam¹, wherin was provided for the right that the House of Austria claimithe to the Dukedome of Wyrtenberge. Sevently, that his sonne sholde conforme for hym self thies agreementes.

And

And eightly, that for the performaunce of thies articles the Duke sholde delyver into thEmperours possessyon thre of his holdes, viz. Schorndorf, Hohen Arsberghe, and Kyrken. This was the whoole, as I remembre, that he tolde me of thies articles; but, assone as I cam to my lodging, I gatte by won of myn acquaintaunce, the copie of tharticles of this agrement in the Duche tonge, by the whiche Your Highnes may perceyve at large thaggrement of the said Duke.¹ After that Mons^r dArras had praised to me the Duke of Wirtenberghe his sonne², “who” (said he) “hathe served the Frenche King, by thoccasyon of his father, yet for the space of thies 5 or 6 yeres, “hathe never borne armes against thEmperour,” he said thEmperour wolde go to Ulme, and thear repose a tyme for the cure of his body, and by that meanes also to force theym of Auguste, who weare the fyrst and the worst in thies warres, and the laste that continuithe in their malice. Here I tolde hym, that I had hard say that August wolde submitte theym selves to thEmperours mercy. “Ye,” said he, “they have made meanes, generally, but “thEmperour woll make theym to knowe theym selves better. I assure you” (quod he) “thEmperour never mindid other in thies warres, but to repressse “thaudace of theym that wolde have bene tyrannes in Germany, and to “bringe thEmpire in good ordre of justice; and nowe” (said he) “thies “Cities and States (whiche hathe bene otherwise persuaded of Hym) begynne “to knowe the same, and shall do every day more and more; and nowe “therfor they be comme yn, and rendred, all but August. Yesterday hither “cam Kempton, Memynghen, Ravenspurgh, and two or thre more, to make “their submissyon.” When I here asked hym, what Strausburghe did, he said “thear ys no great matter against theym, for they have not done moche in “thies warres; and yet” (said he) “they have bene at Ulme, and made “means for their submission, whiche ys looked for at thEmperours comming “to Ulme. This ys the state (said he) “of our thinges here. And whear “the Duke of Saxo, late Electour, hathe entred Duke Mauritius countrey, “minding to go to Lipsia, Mauritius hathe prevented hym, and ys thear so “stronge, that thoder nowe staythe.” When I here asked, whider Mauritius had lefte his seage before Wittenberge, he answered me no thing therto, but said that Mauritius was nowe comme to Lipsia, stronge enoughe for thoder, and that thEmperour had taken ordre that the Duke of Brunswyke, with fyve hundrithe horsemen and fowr thousande foote men, whiche be redy abouted Banbierge, and twenty ensignes of suche men of warre as were in garrison in divers townes Imperialles, that had rendred theymselves, sholde go streight to joyne withe Mauritius; and on thoder syde by the Lansgrave, Mons^r de Bures, and Mons^r de Croninge (that hathe a great nombre of men of warre therby) sholde immediatly marche; so that thEmperour myndithe with all spede to do ageinst theym what may be. Here I said, if thEmperour had gone to Spires or to Wormes (as was said), meny supposithe that his matters shulde have better succeded against the Lansgrave and the Duke of Saxo. "Not a whit" (said he): "thear ys ordre taken good enoughe for theym, " and at Ulme thEmperour shalbe redy for all places, eyther for Hungary, or " eny parte of Germany, or Flaunders, or Italy, and ther shalbe better to " force theym of Auguste;" so herby I gesse that thEmperours indignation is not small against theym of Augusta. In fine he tolde me, that the County Palatyne Electour ("who" (said he) "hathe bene the Emperours good ser- " vaunte, and now at this tyme was not so yvell disposed against thEm- " perour as divers his subjectes wear; wherfor in his submission his greatist " labour was to make his excuse) and the Duke of Bavare were great labourers " in the reconsiliation of the said Duke of Wyrtenberghe." After that he had ended his tale, and that I had said that I was suer Your Majeste wolde be glad to here of thEmperours good successe, for the good and sincere amytye that is betwixt Your Majeste and Hym, wherof thEmperour hathe had profe by meny argumentes, he said, "I assure you thEmperour so takithe yt, " and gave me great charge to shewe you this, that the Kinges Majeste " your master might knowe bothe the state of thEmperours thinges here, " and also his purpose, that is, not (as thoder men have bruted yt) to bringe " Germanye in subjection, but in good ordre of justice, and to suppress the " tyrannie and disobedience of them that were to insolent."

Thus have I molested Your most Excellent Majeste with my longe wrighting; but, (as nere as I coulde bringe it away) withe his very tale. I shall (according to my most bounden duetye) praye Allmighty God for the felicite and longe continuaunce of Your Majesties most prosperous estate, and good successe in all Your Highnes most weighty affaires. MCCCCLXXIV. DAMESELL to PAGET.

AFTER my homble commendations. Hit may please you to understand that this evening I have receyved this packet adressed to your Mastershipp, from my Lord of Westminster; the whiche being yll handled in cariage hether, I am fayne to newe lapp the same in a fayre paper, or els this bringer wuld not gladly mell wythe all. Sir, we have perfect newes here that the Deuke of Saxon hathe recovered his hole contre agayne from Dueke Morice, with also 3 other townes of the said Dewke Morice owne; and presently lyethe before the towne of Lipps wherin Dewke Morice ys, and very likely to have shortly the said Dewke Morice with also the towne. The Lansgrave ys in his contre, and beginneth, as the saying ys here, to leavey a great multitude of newe men; so that the opinion of men here ys, that the doynges betwext the Emperour and them alredy past ar nothing like to these that will ensue; wherof I dowbt not but you ar advertised more larger then I am hable from hens. Wherfor I leave to trouble you any furdur; beseching Almightye God to continewe you in helth, with muche honour. From Andwerpe, the 22th of January, 1546.

" July 1537, when there was an Imperial Ambassador in England, and several letters are extant
" on the subject of his mission both from Crumwell and Wriothesley, dated from the residence of " the former at Stepney. From the mention in the last paragraph of John Hutton who died in " Flanders on the 5th of September 1538 it is evident the letter in the text must have been prior
